Fifth, lower marginal tax rates, inherent in a flat tax, remove most of the incentive to purchase municipal bonds. This is not to say that I oppose lower tax rates. Only that an unintended impact of lower tax rates is that the market for municipal bonds is that much smaller. That is, high marginal tax rates offer incentive to shelter income. The lower tax rates are, the less the incentive to shelter income.

In toto, municipal finance will undergo a radical change as a result of the Treasury tax reform plan. The market for municipal bonds will shrink. the ability of cities and States to raise taxes will disappear because of repeal of the deduction for State and local taxes. Termination of public purpose IDB's will raise costs for State and local governments, where will towns, cities, counties, and State raise money to finance necessary projects?

My proposal, Mr. President, would help rectify this problem. By allowing individuals who invest their IRA or KEOGH contributions in municipal bonds to receive tax-exempt distributions of investment income, we would not be creating another tax shelter—we would simply be returning to the municipal bond market a potential pool of capital which would be lost with the enactment of tax reform. Furthermore, my proposal would not mandate that any funds be directed into municipal securities. It would simply give contributors to IRA's and KEOGH's this option.

IRA's and KEOGH's in the past have had a beneficial effect on savings and on the economy in general, but unfortunately have contributed to the deterioration of the municipal bond market because all tax-deferred income distributions from an IRA or KEOGH are treated as ordinary income. Individuals saving for retirement have no incentive to place their contributions in tax-exempt assets. This is because interest rates on municipal bonds are lower than rates on taxable bonds. Thus, the overall yield on an IRA net of tax would be lower if the funds were invested in municipal securities, as opposed to in taxable bonds. The result is that billions of dollars in IRA's and KEOGH's are now being funneled into taxable investments, rather than into city and State bonds.

In 1982, there were 14.5 million individuals participating in IRA's and 965,000 participating in KEOGH's. Many of these people would benefit from my proposal. In fact, the Congressional Budget Office [CBO] estimates that if this bill had gone into effect in fiscal year 1984, up to 12 million people would have invested at least part of their IRA contributions in tax-exempt obligations. This is because IRA funds can be distributed before a person retires, as early as age 59½. Because these people are still working, many of them are in a tax bracket high enough to benefit from the special tax status afforded municipal bonds. CBO estimates that these people could invest up to $15–$20 billion the first year, and $23–$24 billion the second year, a much needed infusion of capital into the municipal bond market.

As I noted, the revenue loss from this program is estimated to be very small, negligible the first year and only about $100 million a year for the 2 years following. This is surely a small price to pay for the tremendous benefits of a stimulated municipal bond market and additional savings incentives for individuals planning for retirement.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the legislation be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

By Mrs. HAWKINS:

S. 140. A bill to amend the Child Abuse Amendments of 1984, to encourage States to enact child protection reforms which are designed to improve legal and administrative proceedings regarding the investigation and prosecution of sexual child abuse cases; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

CHILDREN'S JUSTICE ACT

Mrs. HAWKINS. Mr. President, today I am introducing important new legislation designed to protect the sexually abused children of America and to enhance the chances of successful prosecution of child molesters.

The concept behind the Children's Justice Act is very simple. The legislation provides much needed funds earmarked to the States for sexual child abuse programs if the State demonstrates its interest in protecting children by enacting reforms in three areas. Reforms are needed to: First, reduce the trauma to the child victim; second, enhance the chances of successful prosecution of child molesters, and third, protect the child from abuse or further abuse.

The legislation does not mandate these reforms, nor does it stifle innovation by specifying which reforms the States should enact. It highlights some of the most successful and proven reforms, those recommended by either the Attorney General's Task Force on Family Violence or the ABA's National Center for Child Advocacy and Protection. The need for these reforms and their success has been well documented.

Under the category of reforms designed to reduce the trauma to the child victim, the legislation cites such reforms as coordinating court proceedings, avoiding duplicate interviews and providing a witness advocate or guardian adlitem. The need for these reforms is great. Often a child is so traumatized by the administrative and court proceedings that they often wonder just who is on trial.

I would like to read portions of letters of victims and their families to better illustrate this point.

From a victim of child pornography:

On several occasions I have been threatened with prison for contempt of court or not cooperating, not once has anyone outside my family and friends expressed any concern for my well being—which over the past year has been hampered by violent nightmares. Tell me, Ms. Hawkins, is this usual treatment for a victim of child pornography? Mr. Reagan is on television now, saying: There is a tradition in this country that you are innocent until proven guilty. What am I guilty of to deserve this treatment? Being 10 years old a decade after my birth? Being taken advantage of by a trusted family friend? I will apologize for neither.

Another parent wrote:

Some of us are waiting to see if the judge is going to be creative enough so that these children won't have to come face to face with the abusers. If they—the children, don't have to face them, then I'm all for it and so's my son. But if they have to face them, then I don't know what we'll do.

From a mother whose daughter was sexually molested:

I would like someone to print an article about the injustice of the victims in sexual abuse cases when videotapes are not used and children are forced to face their attackers in a courtroom. I think the public needs to be aware of what happens to victims and their families when they decide to report and prosecute child abusers. . . . So much of our story wasn't told in the courtroom because of not being able to extract the testimony from Wendy that was necessary. She was terrified into silence by his presence. What a shame that this man is now free to continue with his perverted lifestyle and harm other innocent children and their unsuspecting parents.

Videotaping of a child's testimony not only reduces the trauma to that child victim, it can also improve the chances of successful prosecution of child molesters. A primary reason for the low rate of prosecution of child molesters is the fact that the rules of evidence discredit a child's testimony and many prosecutors are reluctant to pursue prosecution based solely on the testimony of the child victim. Since the nature of the crime is such that there are rarely witnesses or corroborative evidence, the child molester can hide behind these archaic laws and rules of evidence.

Although every State except Nebraska has repealed archaic statutes which require corroboration of sexual child abuse, as a practical matter, most prosecutors are reluctant to pursue prosecution based solely on the child's testimony. The reason lies in the archaic and erroneous legal assumption that a child's testimony is somehow suspect. This is based on old and erroneous assumptions that a child's memory is more malleable and less trustworthy than an adult's. But recent studies have disputed this assumption. The Journal of Social Issues devoted a recent issue to studies of children as witnesses. The findings of the experts are best summed up by Dr. Goodman, director of the Program in Psychology and the Law at the University of Denver. She stated:

Investigators often fail to question children properly, or due to a lack of understanding of children's cognitive abilities elicit what appears to be inconsistent testimony. Many district attorneys are hesitant to pursue cases which rely on children's testimony for fear that no one will believe the children. Even if a case is pursued, attorneys are reluctant to put a child on the stand out of concern for his or her emotional well-being and for fear that the child will not be able to withstand cross-examination. Such judgements, however, are likely to be based on biases, and beliefs rather than on solid grounds.

It is time, Dr. Goodman notes, that these institutions were replaced with solid evidence and deeper understanding.

Therefore, reforms are needed in the rules of evidence to facilitate a child's testimony in a case of sexual child abuse. The most popular and proven reforms are videotaping, which has been adopted by at least 12 States since 1977 and a statutory hearsay exception which has been adopted by at least 6 States since 1982. Other suggested reforms designed to enhance prosecution of child molesters include specific statutory definitions of child abuse, a longer statute of limitations, elimination of the marital privilege, and consideration of the evidentiary viability of a sexually abused child syndrome.

The third area in which reform is vitally needed is to protect the child from abuse or further abuse. Suggested reforms include civil protection orders, granting the court authority to order the accused abuser out of the home instead of forcing the child to flee to a shelter; treatment and counseling programs, for both the abused child and the abuser, in order to break the cycle of abuse; and prevention programs within the local school curriculums.

Mr. President, these reforms are vital if we are to assure the abused, neglected and exploited children of our Nation that we hear and will respond to their cry for help.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a copy of this bill, the Children's Justice Act, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Children's Justice Act".

By Mrs. HAWKINS:

S. 141. A bill to amend the Board for International Broadcasting Act of 1973, to provide for a special Radio Liberty Program of Russian language broadcasting for the Jewish population of the Soviet Union; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

RADIO MACCABEE

Mrs. HAWKINS. Mr. President, the state of Soviet Jewry has reached desperate straits. Emigration has come almost to a standstill. From its peak in 1979 of over 51,000, the flow of Jewish emigration from the U.S.S.R. has fallen off to 1,314 in 1983, and at current rates, will be less than 1,000 for 1984. Reports are reaching the United States with saddening regularity of increasing persecution and harassment of the Jewish community in the Soviet Union, especially those who are willing to speak out concerning their desire to emigrate from the Soviet Union. These refusniks have been beaten, imprisoned, exiled, and placed in mental institutions. They have had their jobs taken from them; they have had their families threatened; in short, the Soviet Government is doing everything in its power to make their lives a living hell.

For a period during the 1970's the Soviets permitted a relatively diverse group of dissident organizations and causes to surface and gain recognition. Lithuanian Catholics, Moslems, Baptists, Pentacostals, scientists and writers all voiced their dissent with the Soviet regime through Samizdat publications that became known in the West. Toward the end of the Breszhnev era, however, and into the Andropov, and now the Chernenko period, Soviet authorities began to crack down on dissident groups. The crackdown was effective, and today these groups have been driven underground.

The exception has been the Soviet Jews. With their courage, their contacts in the West, and their effective organization, they have kept the plight of Soviet Jewry in the eye of the West though the emigration of Soviet Jews has dropped off drastically.

Faced with the might of the Soviet Government, their battle to gain freedom and begin a new life elsewhere assumes herioc proportions. Yet it is easy to see how they could get discouraged. The Soviet authorities actively seek to limit their contact with the West, and the nature of Soviet society prevents them from learning of and gaining support from the efforts or accomplishments of their compatriots.

What is needed is to enhance the ability of the community of Soviet Jews in general, and the refusnik community in particular, to know what is going on in the Soviet Union regarding those events and circumstances that affect them. I believe that the groundwork for such an effort already exists in the form of Radio Liberty. Since the 1950's Radio Liberty has broadcast news about the Soviet Union to people living in the Soviet Union, and today Radio Liberty does include limited programming of special interest to the Jewish community in the Soviet Union. But I believe that in the face of such persecution and harassment as that community is now facing, additional programming is called for. The legislation that I am introducing meets that need.

The purpose of the legislation is to create a "Radio Maccabee Program of Radio Liberty." This new program would be responsible for surveying the broadcast needs of the Jewish community in the Soviet Union with a view to creating radio programming to meet those needs. It would also set up a framework by which to assure that the Radio Maccabee Program enjoys the same input into editorial and programming decisions as is enjoyed by other elements of Radio Liberty. In order to ensure that this new program, involving new and previously unbudgeted responsibilities for Radio Liberty, gets off to a good start, $3 million has to be authorized to cover such construction, hiring, library, and other expenses as is necessary to assure quality broadcasts.

The amount of money involved here is relatively small, and yet the amount of benefit that could come from it is almost incalculable. Mr. President, I hope that my colleagues will support me in this endeavor and help reassure the brave refusnik community in the Soviet Union that we have not forgotten them or their cause.

By Mr. D'AMATO:

S. 142. A bill to promote the safety of children receiving day care services by establishing a national program for the licensing of child day care providers, establishing a clearinghouse for information with respect to criminal records of employees of day care centers, and establishing a hotline for reporting of abuse of children receiving day care services, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

NATIONAL CHILD PROTECTION ACT

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce the National Child Protection Act. The National Child Protection Act will assure the safety and healthy development of our children. It will identify abusers and will help prevent child abuse. Mr. President, our children deserve nothing less.

It is almost impossible to acquire data about the incidence and prevalence of sexual abuse in day care centers. The problem is complicated by several factors, including the difficulty of distinguishing confirmed sexual abuse from reported sexual abuse.

The limited data now collected on sexual abuse by the American Humane Association and the National Center on Child Abuse and Neglect of the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services is not indicative of how widespread sexual abuse is in day care centers. It illustrates, however, that sexual abuse of children is a matter that we should be concerned about.

Nationally, in 1976, there were 1,955 sexual abuse cases reported. In 1981, however, this figure had grown nearly tenfold to 17,594. Much of this increase might be attributed to widespread publicity and the attention focused on this topic in recent years. However, the numbers strongly suggest that something needs to be done.

The problem is the sexual abuse, exploitation, and molestation of children. The National Child Protection Act does not attempt to solve all the problems that our children encounter, but it will help to alleviate this serious situation occurring across our country. Enactment of this legislation will provide us with needed information to accurately detect and deter the sexual abuse of children. We will not only be able to locate sexual abuse, but will be able to prevent sexual abuse.

This legislation sends a message to molesters and child abusers. We will not tolerate them in our day care centers or anywhere else. This outlandish behavior and harm to our children must be discouraged. It must cease, and it must cease now.

The need for regulatory standards governing child programs to assure the safety and health of our children has become ever more necessary following charges of child abuse filed against the staff of day care centers and schools in Chicago, Minneapolis, Cullman, AL, and Manhattan Beach, CA. Seven teachers at the Virginia McMartin Preschool in Manhattan Beach were charged with sexually abusing 180 children over a period of 10 years. This is outrageous. The children might have been in a prostitution ring, or used in pornographic films and photography. More recently, at the Praca Day Care Center in the Bronx, NY, and other centers, there has been sexual abuse reported. The accused at these facilities, and at others, may be found innocent. But, at the same time, our children are becoming fearful, and rightfully so. Parents are worried. We must ease their fears. The National Child Protection Act can do this and a lot more.

We can no longer wait, nor can we take the chance that these incidents will not occur again. We need to have a national reporting system of cases of sexual abuse. This national listing of abusers would be available to day care centers and to law enforcement agencies, not to the general public.

Mr. President, this reporting mechanism will decrease the incidence of sexual abuse. A child molester would not be able to transfer from center to center or from State to State and continue to abuse children. The reporting system would be uniform at all centers and in each State. There would be no disparity in the data collected. There would be a uniform reporting system on sexual abusers.

To assure a comparable system in each State, the Department of Health and Human Services would provide the guidelines for all States to follow. The States would be responsible for making certain that every day care center follow the same procedures. A toll free (800) phone number would be available 24 hours a day, 7 days a week, for anyone to report the abuse of a child. It is a national priority that we have this nationwide system.

Some States have taken it upon themselves to assure the safety and welfare of our children. For example, bills have been passed in State legislatures that allow the conviction of a child molester solely on the basis of the victim's testimony. Other States have taken additional steps. However, many day care facilities are monitored much more loosely. Many only require minimal health and safety standards. Some do not have licensing requirements. Licensing regulations vary widely from State to State and are often subject to change.

Due to the growing number of two-income families, there will probably be an increase in the number of children attending day care. We must not allow them, nor the ones presently attending, to suffer any harm. It is in the best interest of this country that we help children develop to their fullest potential. Children should have available the best educational and developmental resources possible. They are our future. For this reason, there should be quality day care services throughout the United States, not just in a few centers in a few States. To assure a safe and healthy development of our children, the highest standards of day care must be provided at all day care centers.

Adequate screening and licensing of all day care providers can bring us closer to this goal. Not just anyone should be responsible for the education and safety of our chilren. I recognize the significant contributions made by many day care directors and staff. However, to remove the bad from the good, there should be a check on all employees, aides, and volunteers working with our youth at our day care centers. This system would be a fair system that is cognizant of dedicated hard working men and women. Based on guidelines set forth by the Department of Health and Human Services, this system would be quick, efficient, and simple, and it would be the same in each State. It seems only reasonable to provide this background screening information for the sake of our children.

Screening, however, is not enough. We must have qualified personnel at our day care centers. Our children deserve the best. We need more than minimal standards for training and certification of day care center staff and directors.

For example, in 1980 it was reported that only 10 States and the District of Columbia required caregivers to have degrees beyond a high school diploma. When States do require higher education, many do not specify that they should be in early childhood education or child development.

It is only feasible and reasonable that those working with our children be qualified to do so. It is most noteworthy that many centers require that caregivers hold a "Child Development Associate Credential." It has been estimated that approximately 13,000 people in the United States have this credential. This is a significant step in the right direction, but more training and qualifications may be necessary to assure the healthy and best possible development for our children. Therefore, I would like the Department of Health and Human Services to closely assess this concern and I have required this assessment in my legislation.

The National Child Protection Act is not a big spending bill. It does asks, however, that we make certain that our children are safe and are given the best opportunity for healthy development. This legislation will not require the implementation of major changes by centers or States. They can implement these guidelines for the benefit of our children with only minor changes in their present structure. Those that do not feel that our children are worth this extra protection do not need to receive funding for their programs. After all, title XX is for the benefit of our children, not for the destruction of innocent lives.

Mr. President, I strongly believe that we can expediently provide a system that is in the best interest of our children. The Secretary of the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, along with a National Advisory Panel, created by this legislation, can develop guidelines that will work toward the benefit of our children. This panel will help our Nation respond to this desperate situation. These leaders of child day care and representatives of the public serving on the panel will be an invaluable asset in directing and developing guidelines for the safety and healthy development of our children. This panel will consist of the Secretary of the Department of Health and Human Services, four appointed by the President of the United States, four appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and four appointed by the President pro tempore of the Senate.

The attached is the estimated cost of this legislation to the Federal Government (Congressional Budget Office):

ESTIMATED COST TO THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

[By fiscal years; in thousands of dollars]

	1985	1986	1987	1988	1989
Estimated authorization levels:
National clearinghouse	360	380	400	420	440
Advisory panel	17	18	19	20	20
Total authorization levels	377	398	419	440	460
Total outlays	300	394	413	435	456

Note.—Basis of the estimate: The cost associated with the new Federal legislation reflect the 1984 funding levels for the current national clearinghouse on child abuse and the current Advisory Board on Child Abuse and Neglect adjusted in the outyears for inflation. The estimate assumes full appropriation of authorized amounts for each fiscal year. The estimated outlays reflect the spending patterns of current programs.

The provisions in this legislation go a long way in promoting what we all want. This legislation, Mr. President, promotes the social, emotional, physical, and cognitive development of our children. It prevents the molestation of our children. Therefore, I urge my colleagues to recognize the importance of this bill and to join me in passing this legislation for our children.

Our children, families, and country are calling upon us for help. We must respond with the speedy passage of the National Child Protection Act.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

(b) The requirements of section 2008 of the Social Security Act shall apply to States beginning 180 days after the date of the enactment of this Act.

By Mr. D'AMATO:

S. 143. A bill to amend chapter 37 of title 31, United States Code, to authorize contracts retaining private counsel to furnish collection services in the case of indebtedness owed the United States; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

FEDERAL DEBT RECOVERY ACT

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today to reintroduce the Federal Debt Recovery Act. This legislation is identical to S. 1668, which I had cosponsored with Senator Percy during the 98th Congress. On July 25, 1984, the Senate overwhelmingly passed S. 1668 by a vote of 96 to 1; however, the House was unable to complete action on companion legislation, H.R. 6218, prior to adjournment and the bill died.

This bill will assist the Federal Government in reducing the staggering amount of delinquent debt now owed it. It will provide the Justice Department with authority to retain private counsel to conduct litigation to recovery nontax debts.

The need for this legislation is clear: the GAO has reported that "debts owed the Government are enormous and growing each year, with billions of dollars delinquent." According to the Office of Management and Budget, there are now more than $16 billion in nontax delinquencies. The Justice Department is charged with the responsibility to litigate most Federal debt collection cases, but it lacks the staff and the resources necessary to process the mammoth volume of cases referred to it.

On October 25, 1982, the President signed into law the Debt Collection Act. Among other things, the act allows Federal agencies to charge interest and penalties on delinquent debt, offset the salaries of Federal employees owing delinquent debts to the Federal Government, report delinquent debtors to credit bureaus, and use private sector contractors to collect debts owed the Federal Government.

Although the Debt Collection Act provided for the use of private collection agencies, it did not permit the use of private firms to assist in the litigation of Government debt. Testimony at the Senate Governmental Affairs Subcommittee hearing on May 25, 1983, made clear that the use of private attorneys would put real teeth into Federal debt collection.

The Justice Department has tens of thousands of student loan cases and other Federal debts backlogged in U.S. attorneys' offices throughout the country. The Justice Department does not have the computer capacity and personnel to handle the huge volume of delinquent debt cases now awaiting litigation; meanwhile, the statute of limitations will run out on many of these cases. Debtors will continue to get the message that, if they fail to meet their responsibility to repay their debts, nothing is likely to happen to them.

Serious and substantial Federal criminal and civil cases such as narcotics offenses, fraud, tax evasion, and antitrust violations inundate our U.S. attorneys' offices. In the face of such clear and pressing priorities, is it reasonable to continue to burden the Justice Department with the responsibility to pursue debt collection cases, many of which involve small dollar amounts? I think not. The limited resources of the Department should be directed to essential tasks, and not drained away in an attempt to process this avalanche of litigation.

I was recently informed that the Justice Department has well over 21,000 student loan cases referred by the Education Department awaiting litigation. Further, one assistant U.S. attorney handling debt collection cases in a large metropolitan area recently told the Department of Education that more than 2,500 cases were backlogged in her office, cases which were her sole responsibility.

In July of 1983, the Justice Department testified on this bill before the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee and urged the committee to act promptly to enact this legislation. Justice's testimony was unqualified and enthusiastic about this bill and their belief that it will add to the Government's ability to prosecute debt collection cases aggressively.

I have been gratified by the bipartisan support this legislation has received in Congress. It also has been strongly supported by the Department of Education, the Office of Management and Budget, and others interested in reducing the enormous amount of debt owed the Federal Government.

The measure I am introducing today is the product of extensive discussion and deliberation with the Justice Department, the House of Representatives, the Department of Education, and many others with expertise in the field of debt collection. During the summer of 1983, I worked closely with the Justice Department to draft a compromise bill, introduced as S. 1668, which modified the original bill I had introduced with Senator Percy (S. 1356). After lengthy discussion, we agreed to a compromise that gave the Justice Department the power to contract with private law firms for legal services. Further, we agreed that the heads of Federal agencies could then refer cases directly to the law firms hired by Justice.

When S. 1668 was passed by the Senate, it included several important amendments which had been agreed to by all interested parties. First, "collection services" was changed to "legal services," in order to clarify that Federal agencies should not bypass the cost-effective use of collection agencies in recovering delinquent debt. Litigation was intended only to be a tool of last resort.

Second, a provision which gave collection agencies the power to refer cases directly to private firms was deleted. This was done to ensure that Federal agencies have the option to decide whether or not a contract with a collection agency would give the collection agency the power to make direct referrals. Nothing in the bill precluded such contracts from being written.

Third, the Justice Department was authorized to recall any claim referred to private counsel, if such action was in the public interest. This authority was intended to be reserved for exceptional, rather than routine, cases.

Fourth, it adopted the reporting requirement language of its House companion legislation.

All of these improvements, crafted into the final version of S. 1668, are included in the bill I am introducing today. In addition, various floor amendments which were adopted are also included: The Justice Department must use its best efforts to retain more than one law firm from each U.S. judicial district where a contract is awarded; legal fees must be reasonable; and the GAO must make an annual audit to determine the adequacy of competition for the contract and the Justice Department's diligence in retaining private counsel.

It is vital that debtors be certain that their creditors will seek legal remedies in cases of nonpayment. Without such certainty, there is little motivation for recalcitrant debtors to meet their obligations. The Federal Government currently faces a large obstacle to successful debt collection because many debtors, including many of those with the ability to pay, choose not to do so because they believe that no legal remedies will be pursued against them. Unfortunately, in tens of thousands of cases they are right.

This bill will help change this situation. In addition, it will not authorize any additional budget authority for fiscal year 1985 other than that already available to the Justice Department. Any fiscal year 1985 costs incurred from the bill would be absorbed from existing funds.

This legislation will create more effecient, cost-effective debt collection by the Federal Government. It also will help restore the good faith and integrity which should be present in successful debtor-creditor relationships.

Mr. President, I urge that my colleagues join me in supporting this important bill and voting for its passage during the 99th Congress, and I ask unanimous consent that the entire text of this legislation be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

Thank you, Mr. President.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

By Mr. D'AMATO:

S. 144. A bill to require the Secretary of Agriculture to conduct a pilot project involving the redemption of food stamp coupons through uninsured financial institutions; to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry.

CONCERNING THE REDEMPTION OF FOOD STAMPS

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today to offer legislation that would significantly aid our decaying inner cities in their efforts to revitalize. This legislation, which is identical to a bill I introduced in the 98th Congress, establishes a demonstration project whose goal is to ascertain the feasibility of allowing credit unions which do not have deposit insurance to redeem food stamps.

In my State of New York, one pressing example of the need for this legislation exists in the South Bronx. This area, long the symbol of urban decay, is struggling, largely on its own, to recapture the prosperity it once enjoyed. There are many credit unions, but few banks, which serve this area. These institutions, however, are extremely hampered by their inability to redeem food stamps. Because many of the people who live in the area depend on food stamps to meet at least a portion of their nutritional needs, merchants who serve the local population seek financial institutions which can redeem them to do their business. This legislation will establish whether those institutions can serve that need while still complying with established Federal performance standards.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the entire text of this legislation be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

Thank you, Mr. President.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 144

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of Agriculture shall conduct a pilot project under which five financial institutions not insured by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation or the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation are permitted to redeem coupons accepted by retail food stores under the food stamp program and submit to the Committee on Agriculture of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry of the Senate a report describing the results of the pilot project no later than two years after the date of the enactment of this Act.

By Mr. INOUYE:

S. 145. A bill to amend section 1861 (b) of the Social Security Act to authorize reimbursement for the services of certain interns in psychology under part A of the Medicare Program; to the Committee on Finance.

MEDICARE REIMBURSEMENT OF PSYCHOLOGY INTERN SERVICES

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation which will authorize the coverage of psychology internship programs under the teaching provisions of our Nation's Medicare statutes.

Mr. President, for all practical purposes, the students under these psychology programs provide the same type and intensity of care which their medical colleagues do.

As our Nation's population continues to grow older, it is especially important that we ensure that the psychosocial aspects of care are given sufficient priority.

Mr. President, I request unanimous consent that the text of this bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 145

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) section 1861(b)(3) of the Social Security Act is amended by inserting "(including services provided in a hospital by an intern in psychology under a teaching program approved by the American Psychological Association)" after "hospital" the second place it appears.

(b) The amendment made by subsection (a) shall apply to services performed on or after the first day of the first month that begins more than sixty days after the date of the enactment of this Act.

By Mr. INOUYE (for himself and Mr. MATSUNAGA):

S. 146. A bill to amend title XVIII of the Social Security Act to provide for Medicare coverage of services performed by a nurse-midwife; to the Committee on Finance.

MEDICARE COVERAGE OF NURSE-MIDWIFE SERVICES

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, today Senator MATSUNAGA and I are introducing legislation which would modify the Medicare Program in order to ensure that the services of certified nurse-midwives would be readily available to those individuals under the program who desire them.

Presently, certified nurse-midwives are deemed autonomous providers under the Department of Defense CHAMPUS Program, as well as under the Medicaid Program.

The legislation which I am introducing today would not only make the services of certified nurse-midwives readily available to the approximately 1,000 future mothers who receive reimbursement under Medicare annually, but more importantly, will make it expressly clear throughout the Medicare and Medicaid statutes that these individuals are truly autonomous providers. Not only does nurse-midwifery have an outstanding track record, but recent evidence indicates that it is highly cost effective and well respected by beneficiaries.

Mr. President, I request unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) section 1861(s)(2) of the Social Security Act is amended—

(1) by striking out "and" at the end of subparagraph (H);

(2) by adding "and" at the end of subparagraph (I); and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(J) certified nurse-midwife services;".

(b) Section 1861 of such Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"CERTIFIED NURSE-MIDWIFE SERVICES

"(ee)(1) The term 'certified nurse-midwife services' means services furnished by a certified nurse-midwife (as defined in paragraph (2)) which the certified nurse-midwife is legally authorized to perform under State law (or the State regulatory mechanism provided by State law), whether or not the certified nurse-midwife is under the supervision of, or associated with, a physician or other health care provider.

"(2) The term 'certified nurse-midwife' means a registered nurse who has successfully completed a program of study and clinical experience meeting guidelines prescribed by the Secretary, or has been certified by an organization recognized by the Secretary, and performs services in the area of management of the care of mothers and babies throughout the maternity cycle.".

(c)(1) Section 1905(a)(17) of such Act is amended by striking out "as defined in subsection (m)" and inserting in lieu thereof "as defined in section 1861(ee)(2)".

(2) Section 1905 of such Act is amended by striking out subsection (m).

SEC. 2. The amendments made by this Act shall be effective with respect to services performed on or after the first day of the first month which begins more than sixty days after the date of the enactment of this Act.

By Mr. PROXMIRE (for himself, Mr. LEVIN, Mr. SARBANES, and Mr. HART):

S. 147. A bill to prohibit U.S. banks from making loans to enterprises in South Africa and to ban new investment by U.S. corporations in South Africa and for other purposes in order to distance the United States from the abhorrent apartheid policies of the South African Government and to send a clear signal to that regime to modify those racist policies or face further economic isolation; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

SOUTH AFRICAN HUMAN RIGHTS ACT OF 1985

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, the bill I am sending to the desk in behalf of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. LEVIN], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SARBANES], and myself, is designed to make clear to the South African Government that its unjust and immoral policy of apartheid is not acceptable to the United States and must be changed if American corporations are to continue to play a growing role in that country's economy.

Exactly what is apartheid and why should it concern our country? Apartheid is the system in South Africa designed by the white community in 1948 to ensure their absolute rule over the black majority. The 4½ million whites maintain their rule over 21 million blacks by denying blacks the right to vote, denying them educational opportunities, denying them economic and social opportunities, and by requiring them to live in separate, segregated areas. In effect, the whites have adopted a system of dehumanizing the black population in order to maintain their own privileged rule. The minority whites enforce their system through reliance on a harsh and repressive police rule backed up by the strongest military force on the African continent. That force very possibly has a nuclear capability.

Why is it any business of the United States to try to change this abhorrent system in South Africa? First, our history, values, and institutions place Americans in basic sympathy with people seeking political freedom and civil liberties throughout the world. Such a policy is not only right but it helps strengthen our own national security by ensuring that our relations with other countries are not based solely on accommodating values of repressive regimes but rather on the enhancement of democratic values. American participation in both World Wars I and II was to help ensure the survival of such values in this world. After World War II our country, in framing and urging adoption of the UN Charter and the Declaration of Human Rights, formally committed itself to the advancement of political freedom and human rights beyond its shores. We must not falter in that effort now.

Second, it is in America's national interest to be on the side of the black majority who oppose the South African Government's inhuman policies. Ultimately, the blacks will win out in their just struggle and it is important for America to have been on their side in their days of difficulty.

Over a quarter of a century ago, after the true nature of South Africa's ugly apartheid policy became clear, President Eisenhower denounced it and his administration voted in the UN for a resolution condemning that policy. A few weeks ago, another Republican President of the United States, Ronald Reagan, also protested South Africa's racist policies. Yet that regime has persisted in making its immoral system ever more impervious to change despite a long history of international protest.

Neither President Eisenhower nor any subsequent President has sought the cooperation of Congress in adopting measures that make clear to South Africa our abhorrence of its benighted policies. What could we do? We could bring strong economic pressures to bear on South Africa. After all, we are South Africa's biggest trading partner. Our exports to South Africa and our imports from South Africa exceed that of any other country and they are increasing. Also, with the exception of the United Kingdom, the United States has the biggest investment in South Africa of any country in the world. That investment, too, is growing rapidly. In 1950 before President Eisenhower expressed his disapproval of South African apartheid, America's total investment in South Africa was only about $140 million. Today it is nearly 20 times as high. It is in excess of $2.6 billion. Loans by American banks to South Africa are even larger. They are about $3.7 billion. And $600 million of these loans are to the racist promulgators of apartheid itself the South African Government.

So what have we done about this apartheid system our Presidents have deplored as an affront to human dignity. We have increased our investment there by more than 20-fold. Our banks have used the deposits of U.S. citizens, to make huge loans to that racist government. We have become South Africa's most important trading partner and our citizens last year imported $450 million worth of gold coins minted by that government to help its foreign exchange earnings. These actions speak louder than any words of condemnation our Presidents may utter. Since this administration like others before it, will not act; it is time for Congress to take the lead and move beyond rhetoric in dealing with the white minority.

Last year legislation was introduced in the House of Representatives to ban new investment by U.S. corporations in South Africa; to require U.S. businesses operating in South Africa to meet the same fair employment standards for blacks we require of firms in this country; to ban the South African gold coin, the Kruggerand; and to ban new bank loans by U.S. banks to enterprises in South Africa and to ensure that any loans by American banks to the South African Government be limited to education, health, and housing facilities that are available for use by all citizens without discrimination. That bill swept through the House without opposition and with strong support not only from Democratic liberals but from conservative Republicans as well. There was no expressed opposition. The legislation was attached to the export Administration Act. The Senate had no comparable provisions dealing with South Africa in its export bill. House and Senate conferees faced a choice of: first, taking the House South Africa provisions in their entirety; second, taking none of the House provisions on South Africa; or third, compromising and taking some of the House proposals. The bill died in conference, in part because the administration persuaded a majority of the five Senate conferees not to accept the South African provisions incorporated into the House bill nor even a compromise including some of those provisions. I favored taking all of the House provisions.

In my judgment, if the Senate as a body had had a chance to vote on the South African provisions in the House bill, it would have supported them by a big margin. Because it is necessary to renew the Export Administration bill in 1985, we should have an opportunity to bring the South African measures adopted by the House before the Senate early this year. I drafted a bill designed to do exactly that. I intend to attach my bill as an amendment to the Export Administration Act when the bill comes before the Senate early in 1985.

This legislation would at long last provide significant and effective economic sanctions against South Africa and pressure its government to end its racist apartheid policies. It is modest, limited legislation. It would not require the withdrawal of American firms or their investment in South Africa. It would not prevent the reinvestment of profits made there. It would, however, stop new American bank loans and investment and would require the President to persuade other nations to adopt similar measures. It also would, in stopping the sale of the Krugerrand in America, reduce South Africa's foreign exchange earnings by 10 percent. Taken together these measures would put real pressure on that government to begin changing its system in a fundamental way or face further economic isolation.

Some will argue that such economic pressures will not work and its best to work with the existing regime and persuade it by words to change its unjust policies. We heard these same "go slow and try and coax the whites to change" arguments prior to our own civil rights revolution. That revolution was won, however, only after laws were enacted making fair treatment of all our citizens compulsory. In the same way we, and other Western nations, have tried a moderate, coaxing effort with South Africa for over a quarter of a century. This administration in particular has totally emphasized friendship and winning the confidence of the white elite through a policy it calls constructive engagement—with no success. Repression of blacks has gotten worse. My proposal lets the South African Government know that change must begin. It does not require us to end all economic or trade relations but there is a clear, implied threat that further action can and will be taken if true reform does not begin. These moderate measures will strengthen the hand of those white South Africans who are arguing for change and there are many of them.

I want to make clear that the provisions in my bill to stop the importation of the Krugerrand and other South African gold coins is in no way designed to prohibit American citizens from owning gold. The Canadian and Mexican Governments market similar gold coins, and our own Treasury Department markets a gold medallion. The prohibition will not prevent our citizens who want gold coins from purchasing and owning them. Neither will my provision make illegal the holding of existing Krugerrands or lower their value. It will only prohibit the new importation of such coins from South Africa.

Let me emphasize again that my proposals are not drastic. The House passed them with bipartisan support in 1983 and I am sure they will do so again in 1985. Japan, Norway, and Sweden already ban most new investments by their nationals in South Africa. Our country already has economic sanctions, including investment controls, in place against many countries around the world including the Soviet Union, Vietnam, Cambodia, Poland, and Cuba because of their human rights violations. Doing the same with regard to South Africa, then, is consistent with our present practices elsewhere and is in our own national interest. I assure my Senate colleagues that I will push this legislation and urge their support for this bill.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

(b) The Secretary may issue guidelines and criteria to assist persons who are or may be subject to this title in complying with the principles set forth in subsection (a) of this section. The Secretary may, upon request, give an advisory opinion to any person who is or may be subject to this title as to whether that person is subject to this title or would be considered to be in compliance with the principles set forth in subsection (a).

ADVISORY COUNCILS

SEC. 203. (a) The Secretary shall establish in South Africa an Advisory Council (1) to advise the Secretary with respect to the implementation of those principles set forth in section 202 (a), and (1) to review periodically the reports submitted pursuant to section 204 (a) and, where necessary, to supplement the information contained in such reports. The Advisory Council shall be composed of ten members appointed by the Secretary from among persons representing trade unions committed to nondiscriminatory policies, the United States Chamber of Commerce in South Africa, and the South African academic community, and from among South African community and church leaders who have demonstrated a concern for equal rights. In addition to the ten appointed members of the Advisory Council, the United States Ambassador to South Africa shall be a member of the Advisory Council, ex officio.

(b) The Secretary shall establish in the United States an American Advisory Council to make policy recommendations with respect to the labor practices of United States persons in South Africa and to review periodically the progress of such persons in carrying out the provisions of section 201 of this Act. The American Advisory Council shall be composed of 11 members appointed by the Secretary from among qualified persons, including officers and employees of the Department of State, the Department of Commerce, the Department of Labor, and the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, and representatives of labor, business, civil rights, and religious organizations. The Secretary shall publish in the Federal Register any recommendations made by the American Advisory Council under this subsection.

(c) Members of the Advisory Council in South Africa and of the American Advisory Council shall be appointed for 3-year terms, except that of the members first appointed, three on each Council shall be appointed for terms of two years, and three on each Council shall be appointed for terms of one year, as designated at the time of their appointment. Any member appointed to fill a vacancy occurring before the expiration of the term for which the predecessor of such member was appointed shall be appointed only for the remainder of such term.

(d) The United States Ambassador to South Africa shall provide to the Advisory Council in South Africa the necessary clerical and administrative assistance. The Secretary shall provide such assistance to the American Advisory Council.

(3) Members of the Advisory Council in South Africa and of the American Advisory Council shall serve without pay, except that, while away from their homes or regular places of business in the performance of services for the respective Councils, members of the Advisory Councils shall be allowed travel expenses, including per diem in lieu of subsistence, in the same manner as persons employed intermittently in the Government service are allowed expenses under section 5703 of title 5, United States Code.

ENFORCEMENT; SANCTIONS

SEC. 204. (a) Each United States person referred to in section 201 of this Act shall submit to the Secretary (1) a detailed and fully documented annual report on the progress of that person in complying with the provisions of this title, and (2) such other information as the Secretary determines is necessary.

(b) In order to insure compliance with this title and any regulations issued to carry out this title, the Secretary

(1) shall establish mechanisms to monitor such compliance, including onsite monitoring with respect to each United States person referred to in section 201 of this Act at least once in every two-year period;

(2) shall make reasonable efforts within a reasonable period of time to secure such compliance by means of conference, conciliation, mediation, and persuasion;

(3) shall, in any case in which the Secretary has reason to believe that any person has furnished the Secretary with false information relating to the provisions of this title, recommend to the Attorney General that criminal proceedings be brought against such person; and

(4) may conduct investigations, hold hearings, administer oaths, examine witnesses, receive evidence, take depositions, and require by subpoena the attendance and testimony of witnesses and production of all books, papers, and documents relating to any matter under investigation.

(c) The Secretary shall, within ninety days after giving notice and an opportunity for a hearing to each United States person referred to in section 201 of this Act, make a determination with respect to the compliance of that United States person with the provisions of this title and any regulations issued to carry out this title.

(d)(1) Any United States person with respect to whom the Secretary makes a determination under subsection (c) or (f) of this section either that the person is not in compliance with this title or any regulations issued to carry out this title, or that the compliance of the person with this title or those regulations cannot be established on account of a failure to provide information to the Secretary or on account of the provision of false information to the Secretary, may not export any goods or technology directly or indirectly to South Africa.

(2)(A) In addition to the penalties set forth in paragraph (1), the Secretary may impose upon any United States person subject to those penalties—

(i) if other than an individual, a fine of not more than $1,000,000, or

(ii) if an individual, a fine of not more than $50,000.

(B)(i) Any officer, director, or employee of a United States person subject to the penalties set forth in subparagraph (A), or any individual in control of that United States person, who knowingly and willfully ordered, authorized, acquiesced in, or carried out the act or practice constituting the violation involved, and (ii) any agent of such United States person who knowingly and willfully carried out such act or practice, shall be subject to a fine, imposed by the Secretary, of not more than $10,000.

(C) A fine imposed under subparagraph (B) may not be paid, directly or indirectly, by the United States person committing the violation involved.

For purposes of paragraph (1) and this paragraph, "goods" and "technology" have the same meanings as are given those terms in paragraphs (3) and (4) of section 16 of the Export Administration Act of 1979 (50 U.S.C. App. 2415).

(e) The Secretary shall issue an order carrying out any penalty imposed under paragraph (1) or (2) of subsection (d).

(f)(1) The Secretary shall, at least once in every two-year period, review and, in accordance with subsection (c), make a redetermination with respect to the compliance of each United States person referred to in section 201 of this Act with the provisions of this title and any regulations issued to carry out this title.

(2) In the case of any United States person with respect to whom the Secretary makes a determination under subsection (c) or paragraph (1) of this subsection either that the person is not in compliance with this title or any regulations issued to carry out this title, or that the compliance of the person with this title or those regulations cannot be established on account of a failure to provide information to the Secretary or on account of the provision of false information to the Secretary, the Secretary shall, upon the request of that person and after giving that person an opportunity for a hearing, review and redetermine that person's compliance within sixty days after that person files the first annual report pursuant to subsection (a) of this section after the negative determination is made.

(g) Any United States person aggrieved by a determination of the Secretary under subsection (c) or (f) of this section may seek judicial review of that determination in accordance with the provisions of chapter 7 of title 5, United States Code.

(h) The Secretary shall submit an annual report to the Congress on the compliance of those United States persons referred to in section 201 of this Act with the provisions of this title.

The Secretary shall establish dates by which United States persons must comply with the different provisions of this title, except that the date for compliance with all the provisions of this title shall not be later than one year after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(b) Before issuing final regulations pursuant to subsection (a), the Secretary shall publish in the Federal Register the regulations proposed to be issued and shall give interested persons at least thirty days to submit comments on the proposed regulations. The Secretary shall, in issuing the final regulations, take into account the comments so submitted.

WAIVER OR TERMINATION OF PROVISIONS

SEC. 206. (a) In any case in which the President determines that compliance by a United States person with the provisions of this title would harm the national security of the United States, the President may waive those provisions with respect to that United States person if the President publishes each waiver in the Federal Register and submits each waiver and the justification for the waiver to the Congress and if the Congress enacts a joint resolution approving the waiver.

(b) Upon a written determination by the President that the Government of South Africa has terminated its practice of systematic racial discrimination and allows all the people of South Africa, regardless of race or ethnic origin, to participate fully in the social, political, and economic life in that country, the provisions of this title and any regulations issued to carry out this title shall cease to be effective.

(b) If any provision of this Act or the application of this Act to any person or circumstance is held invalid, neither the remainder of this Act nor the application of that provision to other persons or circumstances shall be affected thereby.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I am honored to join with my distinguished colleague, Senator PROXMIRE, in introducing the South Africa Human Rights Act of 1985. Many of the provisions of this legislation are identical to the South Africa restrictions which were attached to the House version of the Export Administration Act with overwhelming bipartisan support on October 27, 1983.

On March 1, 1984, I took to the Senate floor to urge my colleagues who will be Senate conferees on this most vital legislation to accede to the House and accept title III of the Export Administration Act, the U.S. Policy Toward South Africa Act of 1983, which would have:

Established a set of legally enforceable fair employment standards for U.S. firms operating in South Africa with more than 20 employees;

Prohibited U.S. bank loans to the South African Government, except for loans made for educational, housing, and health facilities which are available on a totally nondiscriminatory basis in areas open to all population groups;

Prohibited the importation into the United States of Kruggerands or any other gold coin minted or offered for sale by the South African Government; and Prohibited new investment by U.S. corporations in South Africa.

Mr. President, Senator PROXMIRE fought strenuously during the 6-month conference on the Export Administration Act to have the House provisions directed at exerting pressure on South Africa included in the final version of the bill. Unfortunately, no agreement could be reached and the bill died in conference.

Although his efforts were unsuccessful in the short run, the introduction of this bill today demonstrates his long-term commitment to insisting the Government of South Africa afford all its citizens the basic human and political rights to which they are entitled.

In addition to the four provisions I have just mentioned, the bill we are introducing today will also reimpose foreign policy controls, effective in the Carter administration, on certain exports to the South African police and military entities. It will also tighten controls on nuclear-related exports to South Africa, which has refused to sign the nuclear nonproliferation treaty.

There is a need for these additional controls. In 1977, the U.N. Security Council, with U.S. support, imposed a mandatory ban on the sale to South Africa of arms and of equipment for use by that country's military or police forces. Unfortunately, this has been circumvented under the current administration.

In 1982, a U.S. export license was issued for the sale of 2,500 electric cattle prods, also known as shock batons, that were used for crowd control by South African police, and in another case mechanical gear that could be used for 155mm howitzers was given an export license. An administration official indicated "human error" on the part of the Commerce Department in the approval of the electric cattle prods.

According to a U.S. General Accounting Office [GAO] report on U.S. nuclear exports released in September 1983, South Africa was the third largest recipient of U.S. nuclear exports between July 1, 1981, and June 30, 1982. The administration approved seven nuclear-related exports to South Africa during that time period. Additonally, the Department of Energy granted a license in October 1983 for U.S. companies to service the Koeberg nuclear power reactor, despite tremendous congressional opposition. The Department of Energy granted a total of 13 licenses for nuclear transfers to South Africa in 1983.

In a January 1984 report issued by the American Friends Service Committee [AFSC] entitled, "Military Exports to South Africa—A Research Report on the Arms Embargo," Washington Office Director of AFSC Jim Matlack revealed:

> It is now evident that the Administration has been presiding over a brisk flow of military technology to South Africa. The volume of this trade is much greater than has ever been reported, according to disclosures under the Freedom of Information Act in November 1983. The information released shows that the State Department has authorized commercial sales of more than $28.3 million worth of military equipment to South Africa during fiscal years 1981-1983—the highest levels to South Africa on record.

The State Department has continued to license the sale of munitions list items to South Africa, as the documents released to AFSC have shown.

The Carter administration was successful in reducing the flow. In 1978, the State Department issued 4.6 million dollars' worth of munitions list licenses for sales to South Africa, followed by $25,000 in 1979; there are no licenses on record for 1980. According to disclosures made by the State Department's Office of Munitions Control to AFSC, officials there authorized 29 separate exports of munitions list commodities to South Africa during fiscal years 1981-83. The licenses covered military goods worth $28.3 million—far more than the total value of commercial military exports to Pretoria for the entire previous 30 years.

Mr. President, implementation of the economic sanctions which I mentioned at the beginning of my statement will demonstrate to South African blacks that the United States is prepared to exert new pressures for their political enfranchisement. These restrictions will indicate to the world that the United States does not have a double standard for human rights by race and that it is prepared to adopt sanctions against South Africa as well as Poland and the Soviet Union.

Opponents of these restrictions have argued that the provisions would antagonize blacks by depriving them of employment. But the employment effects, according to a House Subcommittee on Africa report, would be minimal because the actual economic impact of the restrictions is modest. Furthermore, black leaders have indicated that blacks would be prepared to suffer in the short run for long-run purpose. As the late Steve Biko said:

> The argument is often made that the loss of foreign investment would hurt blacks the most. It would undoubtedly hurt blacks in the short run because many of them would stand to lose their jobs. But it should be understood in Europe and North America that foreign investment supports the present economic system of political injustice. . . . If Washington is really interested in contributing to the development of a just society in South Africa, it would discourage investment in South Africa. We Blacks are perfectly willing to suffer the consequences! We are accustomed to suffering.

Similar sentiments were expressed by Nobel Peace Prize recipient Bishop Desmond Tutu during a recent hearing of the House Subcommittee on Africa.

Mr. President, Stanley Greenberg, who is the associate director of Yale University's Southern Africa research program, has rebutted this argument that foreign investment and economic growth by themselves will improve the plight of blacks in South Africa. He testified before the House Subcommittee on Africa in September of 1983:

> This easy association between economic growth and political reform lacks a historic foundation in South Africa; more than a century of industrial development has been accompanied by more, not less, racial discrimination. The pressures for change and reform are rooted not in this economic logic but in the political struggles that have accompanied it—protests, civil disorders, strikes, and organization, internal and external. Businessmen in South Africa have demanded or proved receptive to racial reform only when black political opposition compelled it. If the United States hopes to encourage reform in South Africa, it must align our country, not simply with abstract economic forces and the state, but the political initiatives of the black majority.

I appreciate the administration's most recent statements indicating that the South African Government must do more to improve the lives of its black majority. However, the United States must go beyond words in demonstrating to South Africa our concern and intentions. I believe that this legislation which Senator PROXMIRE and I are introducing today provides some of the additional real actions which are necessary to achieve that goal.

By Mr. INOUYE (for himself and Mr. MATSUNAGA):

S. 148. A bill to amend title 5 of the United States Code, to provide payments under Government health plans for services of nurse-midwives not performed in connection with a physician; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

NURSE-MIDWIFE GOVERNMENT PLAN

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, today, Senator MATSUNAGA and I are introducing legislation to amend title 5 of the United States Code in order to ensure that our Nation's Federal employee will have ready access to the services of certified nurse-midwives, if they so desire.

During the last session of the Congress, the Senate Committee on Governmental Affairs held hearings on the Federal Employees Health Benefit Plan and, at that time, I had the opportunity to bring to my colleagues attention the importance of ensuring that certified nurse-midwifery services will be readily available. These services are highly cost-effective and are truly of the highest quality of care.

I understand from the General Accounting Office [GAO] that presently 91.5 percent of Federal employee enrollees have enrolled in plans which do have access to nurse-midwifery care.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) section 8902(k) of title 5, United States Code, is amended by striking out "or optometrist" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof ", optometrist, or certified nurse-midwife".

(b) Section 8901 of such title is amended—

(1) by striking out "and" at the end of paragraph (8),

(2) by striking out the period at the end of paragraph (9) and inserting in lieu threof "; and", and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(10) 'certified nurse-midwife' has the same meaning given to such term by section 1905(m) of the Social Security Act.".

SEC. 2. The amendments made by the first section of this Act shall apply to contracts entered into on or after the date of the enactment of this Act.

By Mr. PRYOR:

S. 149. A bill on binary chemical munitions; to the Committee on Armed Services.

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, today I am reintroducing a bill to delete all funding for the production of chemical munitions and equipment associated with those weapons. The bill I'm introducing also expresses the sense of the Senate that we intensify ongoing efforts in the Committee on Disarmament to achieve a mutual, verifiable ban on chemical weapons with the Soviet Union and other countries. The bill I'm introducing is the same as S. 994, a bill I introduced in the last Congress on April 7, 1983.

Also, Mr. President, I am joining my distinguished colleague, from Colorado, Mr. HART, in introducing a similar bill banning the production of chemical weapons, but that bill also contains a provision expressing the sense of the Congress that our Defense Department undertake immediate steps to help our Armed Forces detect a chemical weapons attack, and more importantly, defend themselves from such an attack.

Mr. President, as most Members of the Senate are aware, we've not produced chemical weapons in this country since 1969, when production was halted by then-President Richard Nixon. However, when the present administration came into office a proposal was made to renew production. Although certain moneys were approved a couple of years ago, in the current fiscal year, we rejected funding for production of chemical weapons production. This bill simply continues that policy.

Mr. President, I support efforts to maintain our existing stockpile and to continue defensive measures. Our present supply is more than adequate, with thousands of tons of chemical weapons stored across the country and in other parts of the world. These stockpiles should be good for many years to come.

But, Mr. President, it is wrong to produce new binary weapons at this time for the following reasons:

First, it is an unnecessary expenditure of funds at a time when we're faced with enormous Federal budget deficits. Although the fiscal year 1984 budget request was only $157 million, funding for the production of these weapons in later years could cost several billions of dollars. This will bloat the defense budget, and I'm afraid it will end up denying funds for other, more critical, defense needs. Therefore, proposing production of new binary weapons does not show thoughtful defense decisionmaking.

Second, production of new binary weapons adds nothing to our national security. Our existing weapons systems, including our current stockpile of chemical weapons, provides a formidable deterrent. It is not necessary to produce new binary weapons that could become unstable, as well as increasingly difficult and expensive to store and maintain.

Third, the production of new chemical weapons could begin a new arms race that would undermine efforts that are being made for a mutual and verifiable chemical and toxic weapons treaty. Steps have been taken by the present administration, in the Committee on Disarmament, to negotiate a ban on new production of these weapons, and I think a ban on further production in this country, coupled with intensified efforts, would be helpful.

Finally, Mr. President, Western Europe would be a major potential battlefield for the use of chemical weapons. But, our allies there have become increasingly restive about plans to produce new chemical weapons and almost certainly will not allow them to be stored on their soil. Germany, in particular, has made it very clear that it will not harbor additional supplies, and that they will not train their people to use it. Virtually all chemical weapons, in other words, would have to be stored in the United States, far from where they are most likely to be used.

The time has come, Mr. President, to put an end to these hateful and indiscriminate weapons whose main victims are innocent civilians. As a rule, gas does not kill soldiers. Soldiers are equipped with masks and protective clothing that make them invulnerable. It kills civilians who have no protection from aerosol clouds that cause fatalities many miles from their detonation points.

World opinion is on our side. It would be in our best interest, and those of the Soviets, to move ahead and reach an agreement to once and for all ban these weapons. We must do all that we can to create the right kind of environment for this agreement, and we must be very careful about the message that we send to the Soviets and the rest of the world.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) notwithstanding any other provision of law, no agency of the Government may obligate or expend appropriated funds after the date of the enactment of this Act for the production of lethal binary chemical munitions.

(b) For the purposes of this section, the term "lethal binary chemical munitions" means (1) any toxic chemical (solid, liquid, or gas) which is intended to be used to produce injury or death to human beings through its chemical properties, and (2) any device, instrument, apparatus, or contrivance, including any components or accessories thereof, intended to be used only to disperse or otherwise disseminate any such toxic chemical.

SEC. 2. It is the sense of Congress that the President should immediately continue and intensify the efforts in the Committee on Disarmament with the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, and other countries, to achieve an agreement establishing a mutual, verifiable ban on the production and stockpiling of chemical weapons.

By Mr. HATCH (for himself, Mr. THURMOND, Mr. DECONCINI, Mr. GRASSLEY, and Mr. DENTON):

S. 150. A bill entitled the "Freedom of Information Reform Act"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

FREEDOM OF INFORMATION REFORM ACT

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I am pleased to introduce the Freedom of Information Reform Act which was unanimously approved by the Senate in the 98th Congress. The unanimous bipartisan support for this legislation predates even the 98th Congress. In the 97th Congress, the Senate Judiciary Committee voted 17 to 0 in favor of a broader version that won Senate approval last Congress. The compromises which made this bill successful were largely forged in the 97th Congress. At that time, members of the Judiciary Committee, most notably myself and Senator LEAHY, met regularly with representatives of the news media, public interest groups, the business community, law enforcement agencies, and the Reagan administration. The reform proposals which emerged from that taxing process eliminate many of the serious flaws in the Freedom of Information Act. Yet the reforms would preserve the act's function of permitting the public to acquire information from Government agencies. The bill's success at balancing the need for reform with preservation of the mission of the act won acclaim from the participants in the negotiation process. The Reagan administration endorsed the package and the Washington Post accurately noted:

It is quintessentially American to believe that the people control the government and that they have a right to know what the government is doing. The Judiciary Committee bill preserves that right. Washington Post, May 25, 1982, page A16.

Since this bill won the endorsement of both press and administration leaders, the Constitution Subcommittee has held several more days of hearings and further fine-tuned several of the bill's provisions to accommodate comments made by journalists and press representatives. In all, the Constitution Subcommittee has held more hearings on the FOIA reform and oversight than any other committee in congressional history. The subcommittee has held over 10 hearings and heard over 80 expert witnesses from every conceivable vantage point.

The product of this extended effort is the Freedom of Information Reform Act, which has passed the Senate unanimously last Congress. The House of Representatives did not consider this bill on the floor in the last Congress, but my meetings with the House subcommittee chairman in charge of information policy lead me to believe that the House will pass some FOIA reforms in this Congress.

The success of this bill in the Senate owes much to the untiring efforts and cooperation of Senator PATRICK LEAHY I would particularly like to thank him for his support and diligence in arriving at this reasonable solution to several of FOIA's acknowledged problems. In addition, I commend Chairman THURMOND of the Judiciary and the ranking member of the Constitution Subcommittee, Senator DECONCINI, for their cosponsorship and contributions in bringing this bill to its current position of bipartisan support.

This bill reshapes the Nation's information policy by clarifying several important difficulties posed by ambiguous or overly broad language within FOIA. It deals with such diverse topics as protection of law enforcement informants, protection of criminal investigations and techniques, confidentiality of trade secrets and business information, protections against invasions of personal privacy, and various procedural reforms, such as assessment of appropriate user fees and guidelines for using FOIA in lieu of court-supervised discovery procedures.

LEGISLATIVE BACKGROUND OF FOIA

The need for refinements in FOIA's language and policy takes on more meaning in the context of the law's history. Some of the underlying policies of the act trace their roots back to the first amendment debates in the First Congress.

Because a representative democracy requires an informed citizenry and also confidentiality for many Government functions, the first amendment was crafted to secure a climate of free information without creating a constitutional right to obtain information from the Government.

The first amendment was part of a larger and more complex constitutional scheme which contemplated some balancing of privacy, confidentiality, and openness to insure the overriding goal of a free and secure society. In the First Congress, as is still the case today, the primary issue concerning the first amendment was whether it would give constitutional effect to common-law principles which balanced confidentiality and openness needs or embody libertarian concepts which generally favored open information policies regardless of the consequences.

James Madison, who submitted the first draft of the amendment to the Congress, attempted to constitutionally codify his own expansive libertarian notions in the broadest possible language. Madison was persuaded that an absolute individual right to know was the only way to prevent the problems of censorship the colonials had endured under the rule of the Crown. Madison urged the First Congress to adopt language stating:

"No State shall violate the equal rights of conscience or the freedom of the press." (Annals of Congress 1789–1791, vol. 1–441, 753–4.)

This was not adopted. Its failure was not, however, a vote for government censorship powers, but a recognition that traditional common-law rules prohibited prior restraint without the potential for precluding confidentiality when necessary to protect freedom, such as in "military operations and foreign negotiations," to use the examples of George Mason. (Jonathan Eliot, Ed., The debates in the several State conventions on the adoption of the Federal Constitution," Vol. 3, 170.)

The language of the first amendment, which was adopted, however, did not then or now comprise a constitutional freedom of information act, as former Justice Stewart has stated. (Potter Stewart, "Or of the Press" 26 Hastings Law Journal 631, 636 (1975).) Instead, in the words of one of the members of the Constitutional Convention, James Wilson:

"What is meant by liberty of press is that there should be no antecedent restraint upon it; but every author is responsible when he attacks the security or welfare of the government, or the safety, character, and propriety of the individual." James Wilson, Pennsylvania and the Constitution, at 308.

The first amendment clearly was a compromise between Madison's libertarian concept of expansive free conscience rights and the view of Alexander Hamilton and others that amendments were unnecessary.

What the Congress gave the Nation was a constitutional provision that prevented most censorship, but created no affirmative rights of individual citizens to compel the Government to disclose information. While the amendment clearly prohibits Congress from enacting prior restraints on publication, it makes no assertions about the Government's duty to provide information. In fact, the Government may even exercise prior restraint of information the public already has in some circumstances, such as in the face of a clear and present danger. (249 U.S. 47 (1919).) The popular notion of a constitutional public right to know, in the words of Prof. David O'Brien, "has no basis in the text or historical background of either the Constitution or the first amendment." (David M. O'Brien, "The Public's Right to Know," at 166 (1981).)

Although the public does not possess an enforceable constitutional right of access to governmental information, the concept of an informed electorate was a vital interest of the New Republic which the First Congress intended to secure with the first amendment's proscription of prior governmental restraint of individual's communications. This interest in openness gave rise to FOIA. The general interest in an informed citizenry has commanded attention in public policy debates recently as Congress has moved to grant and expand statutory rights to gain access to governmental information in the absence of an enforceable constitutional right.

The first statutory attempt to clearly define the parameters of public access to Government information came in section 3 of the Administrative Procedure Act of 1946 [APA]. (Pub. L. 79-404, 3, 60 Stat. 238 (1947).) In addition to requiring Federal agencies to index their files and make information available to the public, the act also provided certain disclosure exemptions. Under section 3, administrative officials were permitted to withhold any information "requiring secrecy in the public interest." Information could be withheld when the person seeking the material was not "properly and directly concerned," where the information was "held confidential for good cause found," or "when the information sought was related to the internal management" of a Government agency or department. (Pub. L. 79-404, 3, 60 Stat. 238 (1946).)

Despite section 3's intention to increase governmental disclosure, its vague terms often denied access to records which had little need to be protected. An individual's request could be denied because the agency did not find him "directly concerned" with the matter. Once an information request had been denied, a requester had no means to appeal the decision because section 3 did not provide a remedy for unlawful withholding.

A. THE FREEDOM OF INFORMATION ACT OF 1966

As Congress became more aware of the limitations built into section 3, amendatory legislation was introduced. The debates on this legislation stressed the need to provide citizens with adequate information to be responsible voters. For instance, Congressman John Moss asserted:

[O]ur system of government is based on the participation of the governed * * * We must remove every barrier to information about—and understanding of—Government activities consistent with our security if the American public is to be adequately equipped to fulfill the ever more demanding role of responsible citizenship. (112 Cong. Rec. 13641 (1966).)

The purpose of the 1966 Freedom of Information Act, as stated by the Senate report, was to change the emphasis from withholding to disclosure while providing adequate protection for vital confidential Government activities. (—Stat.—(1966) Current version of 5 U.S.C. 552 (1976).) This was accomplished by mandating disclosure and creating standards for withholding that could be easily understood and applied by the agencies and the courts.

With its exemptions, Congress clearly recognized individual privacy rights and the need for some confidentiality in Government. As noted above, Congressman Moss acknowledged the need to restrict disclosures that might endanger our society. The Senate report emphasized the same principle.

It is not an easy task to balance the opposing interests, but it is not an impossible one either. It is not necessary to conclude that to protect one of the interests, the other must of necessity, either be abrogated or substantially subordinated. Success lies in providing a workable formula which encompasses, balances, and protects all interests, yet places emphasis on the fullest responsible disclosure. (S. Report 813.)

For the next 8 years, FOIA was often criticized. Even a Federal court called it poorly drafted. (Washington Research Project Inc. v. Dept. of H.E.W., 366 F. Supp. 939 (D.C.D.C. 1973).) Some critics went beyond legal analysis of the act to charge that it failed to provide the open access to Government files that it had promised. An insightful observation of this aspect of FOIA's history, however, noted that these critics "seem to have [had] unreasonably high expectations. To satisfy such critics, the act would have needed divine powers to reverse human nature and compel the silent to speak." (Clark, "Holding Government Accountable: The amended Freedom of Information Act", 84 Yale L.J. 741, 747-8 (1975).)

B. THE 1974 AMENDMENTS

After several years and in response to charges that FOIA had failed to keep its promises, Congress undertook to amend the act. The primary catalyst for this legislative reaction was the Watergate incident. As the break-in was uncovered, skepticism about the executive branch swept through Congress, transforming the amendment of the 1966 act into an ethical issue.

In this emotionally charged atmosphere, the Senate bill to provide "open Government" passed on a vote of 64 to 17, and by a vote of 349 to 2 in the House in October 1974. President Ford vetoed the bill because it jeopardized law enforcement functions. The veto was easily overridden in the House by a vote of 372 to 31 on November 20. In the Senate, however, the vote was very narrow (64 to 27)—exceeding the required two-thirds vote by 3.

Some of the inherent defects of the 1974 amendments were recognized by many Members of the Senate at the time of the override vote. Of greatest concern were the disclosure standard required by law enforcement agencies and the threats to personal privacy. As Senator Hruska stated:

[I]t is extremely difficult if not impossible to prove that information, if disclosed, would invade a person's privacy or would impair the [law enforcement] investigation. The magnitude of such a task and the standards of harm that are defined in the amendment create serious doubt as to whether such a provision is workable aside from questionable in its wisdom.

I cannot support the enrolled bill because it emphasizes the right to know to the detriment of the right of privacy and security and the interests of us all in a responsive government. 120 Cong. Rec. S. 36873 (1974).

To some degree, the specific issues of FOIA were clouded by the overriding issues and passions of the Watergate era. Some Senators attempted to focus on the specific FOIA issues by proposing amendments implementing improvements suggested by President Ford. This attempt, which was summarily rejected, would have incorporated a standard of disclosure to protect law enforcement agencies.

The overly optimistic cost estimate of the bill provides one apparent example of the hasty consideration given the amendments due to the distractions of the Watergate scandal. Although the 1974 amendments limited fee collections, expanded access to government documents, and enhanced the availability of court-awarded attorneys fees for FOIA lawsuits, the House reported that the bill would cost only $50,000 to $100,000 per year. This low figure should have been suspect because, additionally, agencies were required to absorb the cost of most of the expensive part of responding to a FOIA request, the reviewing of records to determine whether any portion could or should be classified as exempt. While no one knows the exact cost of FOIA today, estimates begin at $61 million and rise from there. Responding to a single request made by a renegade CIA agent has cost taxpayers over $500,000. Had Congress taken the time necessary to completely and adequately assess the implications of amending, FOIA, it may have recognized the inherent problem of costs and avoided the resultant economic imbalance.

President Ford realized the impracticality of the costs provisions, in his message to the House explaining his veto. He pointed out that the law enforcement agencies would be economically hampered because the agencies could not afford to hire the large number of highly trained personnel necessary to review requested confidential files and records. Today the FBI has hired over 300 people and spends well over $12 million annually to comply with FOIA.

The Constitution Subcommittee hearings in the 97th and 98th Congress were the most extensive oversight of FOIA yet undertaken. A major complaint which dominated those seven hearings was that the confidentiality of informants and investigations is jeopardized by the threat of FOIA disclosure of sensitive information. The documentation of this complaint at the hearings served to confirm the findings which have been compiled on the deleterious effects of FOIA on law enforcement. In 1978 the Senate Judiciary Subcommittee on Criminal Law concluded that:

It can safely be said that none [of the sponsors of FOIA] foresaw the host of difficulties the legislation would create for the law enforcement community, nor did they foresee the utilization that would be made of the act by organized crime and other criminal elements or the damage it would do to the personal security of individual citizens * * * Informants are rapidly becoming an extinct species because of fear that their identities will be revealed in response to a FOIA request.

In that same year the General Accounting Office released a study detailing 49 instances of potential informants refusing to cooperate with law enforcement authorities due to FOIA. In 1979, FBI Director Webster supplied documentation of over 100 instances of FOIA interference with law enforcement investigations or informants. In 1981, his list was expanded to 204 examples. In 1983, even more examples were brought out by his testimony. In fact, no fewer than five different reports studying the impact of FOIA have concluded that the act has harmed the ability of law enforcement officers to enlist informants and carry out confidential investigations. Among these, the Attorney General's 1981 Task Force on Violent Crime found that FOIA should be amended because it is used by lawbreakers "to evade criminal investigation or to retaliate against informants." A 1982 Drug Enforcement Adminstration study documented that 14 percent of DEA's investigations were "aborted or significantly compromised" by "FOIA-related problems."

The Judiciary Committee hearings have indicated also that FOIA is being misused by businesses in an effort to obtain valuable trade secrets. The testimonies are replete with such examples of abuse by business concerns of the spirit and original purpose of FOIA. For example, Mr. Jack Pulley, an attorney with the Dow-Corning Corp., told us of an article entitled "Freedom of Information Act: Strategic Opportunities and Threats," in which the authors described how FOIA could be used to gain what they called "a differential competitive advantage."

Currently the standard of protection, "trade secrets and commercial or financial information obtained from a person privileged and confidential," presumes that all "confidential" information will be protected, but supplies no statutory definition for "confidential." Instead the Senate report specified that information "customarily not released to the public by the person from whom it was obtained" would be exempt. The House report extended protection to any information given the government in confidence "whether or not involving commerce or finance." Despite the breadth of protection intended by Congress, a Federal court unilaterally narrowed the exemption years later by requiring a submitter to demonstrate a "substantial competitive harm" in order to qualify for exemption. (National Parks v. Morton, 498 F. 2d 765 (D.C. Cir. 1974).) This broader test requires agencies and courts to guess about the economic impacts of disclosure and has led to numerous "reverse FOIA" lawsuits as submitters have attempted to protect proprietary data against release to commercial requesters who believe that the act, under current standards, can be used to learn valuable information about competitors.

The current standard has also been held to offer no protection to nonprofit submitters, such as hospitals, universities, and scientific researchers, because they cannot show economic injury if the product of their research is disclosed.

In addition, the extensive Constitution Subcommittee hearings in the 97th and 98th Congresses revealed other aspects of FOIA in need of fine-tuning. As mentioned earlier, the expanding costs of the act to the taxpayer suggested that those who directly benefit by requesting information should readily accept the responsibility of paying the cost of producing the information. The Government agencies' inability to comply with the act's short time limits recommended a more workable time schedule for complying with requests in the event of a backlog of requests or other unusual circumstances. Revising the act's second exemption to provide adequate protection for law enforcement manuals and instructions to investigators, auditors, or negotiators, was another aspect of the testimony. Removing important limitations on the exemption designed to guarantee personal privacy also emerged as an important aspect of FOIA reform.

A new exemption to protect Secret Service records was featured as a subject worthy of the protection currently given geological data and sensitive information about regulation of financial institutions under current exemptions 8 and 9.

The hearings also noted the need to reconsider the factors governing current determinations of types of information that may be released because they are "reasonably segregable" from classified or exempt portions of a requested record. Clearly giving away too many pieces of a sensitive record might, in the hands of a sophisticated requester, defeat the protections intended by the classification or exemption. Another item discussed was the propriety of requests from certain classes of requesters, including aliens, imprisoned felons, or parties in litigation with the Government who have access to information via the alternative route of discovery under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. These matters each became an element of the bill approved by the Judiciary Committee unanimously last Congress.

FEES AND WAIVERS

CURRENT SITUATION

Existing law allows agencies to collect only the costs of searching for and duplicating requested records. These costs are only a fraction of the true costs of answering an FOIA request. The cost of reviewing documents, editing out exempt material, and other processing accounts for the bulk of the expense of FOIA. Fees currently may be waived or reduced when furnishing the information can be considered as primarily benefiting the general public.

CURRENT POLICY IMPLICATIONS

Congressional reports in 1974 estimated that FOIA would only cost between $40,000 and $100,000 annually governmentwide. Instead, direct costs—not counting litigation expenses and other indirect costs—amounted to nearly $60 million in 1980. Moreover, agencies collect only about 2 percent of the costs of the act in search and duplication fees. In one case, a single FOIA request for CIA documents cost the public nearly $500,000 to process. (Agee v. CIA, 517 F. Supp. 1335, 1342 N. 5.) In addition to the subsidy questions presented by current fee policies, the lack of a uniform fee schedule has made it difficult for a requester to predict the cost of particular documents.

BILL PROVISION

The bill would authorize the Office of Management and Budget to issue guidelines aimed at developing a uniform schedule of fees and processing procedures for all agencies. Under the bill, agencies could charge fees for "all costs reasonably and directly attributable to" search, duplication and other FOIA processing activities. No fee would be charged whenever the costs of routine fee collection and check processing would be likely to exceed the amount of the fee itself. Half of all fees collected would be retained by agencies to fund their FOIA operations unless an agency was determined not to have been in substantial compliance with applicable time limits. In addition, an agency could charge a fair value fee for commercially valuable technological information generated or purchased by the Government at substantial cost.

Fee waivers for search and duplication charges would be authorized when, as under existing law, an agency determines that it is in the public interest to furnish the information. New processing charges would be subject to waiver for various types of public interest groups, providing that the agency determines that the information is not requested for a commercial use.

TAX LIMITS: CURRENT SITUATION

Section (a)(6) of title 5, United States Code, requires an agency to make an initial determination within 10 days of receipt of a request whether to disclose the records. If the agency decides within that period to withhold the requested records, it must notify the requester of the reasons for the exemption within the same period. The requester may then choose to appeal the denial, in which case the agency has 20 working days to determine the appeal.

By notice to the requester, an agency may extend these time limits for an additional 10 days in three narrowly defined "unusual circumstances." If an agency fails to comply with any of these statutory deadlines, the requester is deemed to have exhausted his administrative remedies and may immediately file a suit in a district court to compel disclosure. Section 552(a)(6)(C) permits a court to grant extra time to an agency in "exceptional circumstances" where the agency can show it is also exercising "due diligence."

CURRENT POLICY IMPLICATIONS

The sheer volume and complexity of requests often make compliance with current time limits unrealistic. When pressed to hastily process requests, the agencies often perfunctorily deny requests or erroneously release information that should be exempt. Moreover, agencies with a substantial backlog simply cannot respond to important news media requests in a timely fashion.

BILL PROVISION

This section retains the 10-day time limit provision in existing law, but would allow agencies to take 30-working-day extensions in "unusual circumstances." The bill would broaden the definition of "unusual circumstances" to include new categories of such circumstances.

The bill contains new language providing that an agency shall not be considered to have violated the act's time limits unless and until a court rules on the matter. In addition the bill would require agencies to draft regulations giving expedited access to requesters who demonstrate a compelling need.

DUPLICATIVE REQUESTS

CURRENT LAW AND POLICY IMPLICATIONS

Agencies are currently burdened with numerous requests for records consisting mainly of newspaper articles, magazine articles, and other records publicly available. Nonetheless, the act requires agencies to act as the world's largest library reference service. In other instances, the agencies receive multiple requests from the same party for the same information as the requester tries to update his information occasionally. The act now requires the agencies to send the same information time after time.

BILL PROVISION

The bill allows the agency to supply the requester with an existing index of records or charge full duplication costs without regard to any fee waiver provisions.

BUSINESS CONFIDENTIALITY PROCEDURES

CURRENT LAW

A businessman or other private party who submits information to a Government agency in compliance with a mandatory order has no statutory right to notice that his records have been requested by a third party. Although a requester has a statutory right to de novo review in a Federal district court to challenge an adverse agency decision, a submitter of information has no similar rights when an agency decides to release information the submitter considers secret or confidential.

CURRENT POLICY IMPLICATIONS

Hearings have indicated that valuable trade secrets have been disclosed by agency inadvertance and that this may occur at some agencies without any notice whatsoever to the owner of the private information. In short, FOIA's objective of protecting private information while disclosing public information is frustrated by the common practice of commercial espionage.

BILL PROVISIONS

The bill would provide mandatory notice to any submitter of confidential information sufficient to inform him of the request for his records and to afford him an opportunity to object to potential disclosure. In the event the agency decides to disclose the record anyway, the submitter would have a right of de novo review of the agency decision in a Federal district court.

JUDICIAL REVIEW

CURRENT LAW

Federal district courts do not currently have jurisdiction to review de novo an agency's decision to disclose confidential business information. FOIA currently does not have a statute of limitations.

CURRENT POLICY IMPLICATIONS

A requester of business information enjoys appeal rights not shared by the submitter of information who has equal or greater interests to protect. The absence of a statute of limitations means that any denied FOIA request may become the subject of a lawsuit compelling disclosure years after an agency may have considered the matter closed. Thus, evidence relevant to the case may have disappeared by the time the lawsuit compelling disclosure is filed.

BILL PROVISIONS

Federal courts are given jurisdiction to review "reverse FOIA" suits brought to protect confidential business information against agency disclosure. The bill sets a 180-day statute of limitations.

MANUALS AND EXAMINATION MATERIALS

CURRENT SITUATION

Exemption 2 currently protects information "related solely to the internal personnel rules and practices of an agency." The scope of this protection has been confused by apparently conflicting views of this language in the House and Senate reports when FOIA was enacted. Although this language arguably protects manuals and instructions to investigators, inspectors, auditors, and negotiators, the judicial attempts to reconcile the House and Senate reports often led to inconsistent results.

CURRENT POLICY IMPLICATIONS

Although most courts recognize the sensitivity of instructions to investigators, inspectors, auditors, or negotiators, particularly when disclosure of the instructions could frustrate their legitimate Government functions, occasionally a judicial decision would reach a contrary result. See Hawkes v. Internal Revenue Service (507 F.2d 481—IRS audit guidelines ordered disclosed).

In addition, FOIA apparently authorizes the disclosure of examination materials which are exempt under the Privacy Act. To protect the objectivity and fairness of testing, as well as to promote consistency between the two acts, they should not conflict in this manner.

BILL PROVISION

This provision will clarify congressional intent in conformance with the original House report on exemption 2 and the majority of court cases on this subject. Several cases have found protectible interests in records specifically mentioned under this provision. For instance, Caplan v. BATF (587 F.2d 544 (1978)) protected a law enforcement manual; Ginsburg v. FEC (591 F.2d 752 (1978)) protected audit review guidelines; Cox v. Department of Justice (576 F.2d 1302 (1978)) protected U.S. marshal's manual. This provision will reaffirm Congress original intent, as expressed in the House report of FOIA, to protect sensitive law enforcement manuals and auditing records which might enhance vulnerability of Government functions to criminal activity.

Under the bill's new exemption 2, manuals and instructions to investigators, inspectors, auditors, or negotiators would be exempt "to the extent that disclosure * * * could reasonably be expected to jeopardize" their activities. Comparable new protection would apply to examination material.

PERSONAL PRIVACY: CURRENT SITUATION

The current sixth exemption protects from disclosure "personal and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy."

CURRENT POLICY IMPLICATIONS

This exemption contains a threshold test that often frustrates the substantive content of the exemption. Thus, even if a record represents a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy, it does not qualify for protection unless the record is found in a personnel, medical, or similar file. Due to this formalistic file limitation, a court may permit disclosure of clearly unwarranted invasions of privacy simply because the invasion is found in the wrong kind of file. Congress intended to protect privacy not file labels.

BILL PROVISION

The new bill broadens protection of personal privacy by exempting any "record or information concerning individuals * * * the release of which could reasonably be expected to constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." The bill also would provide express protection for mailing list data.

LAW ENFORCEMENT: CURRENT SITUATION

The current seventh exemption exempts investigatory records compiled for law enforcement purposes if those records also meet one of six further requirements (A-F). The six further criteria are intended to protect enforcement proceeedings against disclosures to suspects, fair trials, personal privacy, identities of informants, investigative techniques, and the life and safety of law enforcement personnel.

CURRENT POLICY IMPLICATIONS

The current threshold language of the exemption means that records are only eligible for protection if they are investigatory records compiled for law enforcement purposes. This could mean that a record which jeopardizes one of the six requirements, such as "endanger the life * * * of law enforcement personnel," could be disclosed simply because it does not satisfy the formalistic test of being an investigatory record. This exalts form over substance.

The current language of (7)(A) requires an agency to show that disclosure of a record "interferes" with an enforcement proceeding. At the outset of an investigation, however, the agency often does not know which aspects of a record, if disclosed to the suspect, would interfere with the investigation. Thus the existing language could disclose to a suspect vital information about an ongoing investigation.

The current language of (7)(D) requires that a record conclusively "disclose the identity of an informant" before it qualifies for exemption. This ignores the commonsense principle that some information that does not in itself identify the informant can, in some circumstances known only to the suspect, result in such identification.

The threshold language about "investigatory" has meant that law enforcement manuals were not covered by the exemption for law enforcement techniques and procedures. The courts have also reached conflicting results about the protection to be afforded prosecutorial guidelines and other law enforcement techniques and procedures.

Finally, the language in (7)(F) has an obvious and absurd limitation. Under this language, records are only exempt if they endanger the life of a police officer, without giving similar protecton to the life of any natural person.

Some kinds of investigations are particularly difficult tc protect from abuse under FOIA. These are characteristically the kinds of investigations that involve organized crime, terrorism, and foreign counterintelligence. In these instances, the suspects often have the time, resources, and inclination to use FOIA to learn the identities of informants, the progress achieved by various investigations, and methods to avoid detection and prosecution. In short, these entities have in common a detached coordinating agent with the ability and motivation to circumvent the intent of the exemptions.

In hearings before the Constitution Subcommittee, FBI Director Webster documented 204 recent examples of FOIA substantially jeopardizing law enforcement.

BILL PROVISION

The amended exemption 7 would exempt from disclosure any information that could reasonably be expected to disclose a confidential source, including a State or local government agency or foreign government. This change would afford greater protection to information which should clearly be exempt from disclosure due to its serious implications for law enforcement investigations and the safety of confidential informants.

The present exemption only includes information that would disclose a confidential source. The rationale is to broaden the definition of confidential source to include State, local, and foreign governments. Some of the formalistic requirements of exemption 7, such as the threshold requirement that the record must be investigatory, are deleted to focus on preventing harm to law enforcement functions.

ORGANIZED CRIME: CURRENT LAW

FOIA currently makes no provision for the extensive, damaging use made of the act by organized crime.

CURRENT POLICY IMPLICATIONS

There is much evidence of the existence of sophisticated networks of organized crime FOIA requesters. Under the current FOIA there is a real danger which accompanies FOIA requests by organized criminal groups who have both the incentive and the resources to use the act systematically—to gather, analyze, and piece together segregated bits of information obtained from agency files. These sophisticated criminals can use the FOIA to determine whether an investigation is being conducted on him or his organization, whether there is an informant in his organization, and even who that informant might be. The release of records containing dates of documents, locations reporting investigations, the amount of material, and even the absense of information are all meaningful when compiled in the systematic manner employed by organized crime.

BILL PROVISION

This bill would exclude from disclosure all documents compiled in a lawful investigation of organized crime which are specifically designated by the Attorney General for purposes of this section. This exclusion would apply to documents that were first generated or acquired by such law enforcement authority within 8 years of the date of the request, except where the agency determines pursuant to regulations promulgated by the Attorney General that there is an overriding public interest in earlier disclosure or in a longer exclusion not to exceed 3 years.

Finally, the bill acknowledges that organized crime constitutes a special problem under FOIA. There is much evidence of the existence of sophisticated networks of organized crime FOIA requesters. For example, organized members in the Detroit area have been instructed to submit FOIA requests to the FBI in an effort to identify FBI informants. Through this concerted effort, the members and associates of this family have obtained over 12,000 pages of FBI documents.

The withholding of information on the basis of one of the enumerated exemptions can often be ineffective in avoiding the anticipated harms that would accompany disclosure because invoking the exemption itself becomes a piece of the mosaic. To invoke (b)(7)(D), for example, is to tell the requester, potentially a criminal seeking information in his illicit organization, exactly what he may want to know—that his organization has an internal informant.

In such a case, the Freedom of Information Act presents the potential for damage to sensitive FBI investigations, even though no release of substantive information is made. A requester with an awareness of the law's provisions, a familiarity with an agency's records systems, and whatever personal knowledge he brings to the situation, can gain insight into FBI operations regardless of his ability to procure a release of Bureau documents. For example, knowledge that a suspected informant's file has grown over a period of time is often enough to tip off the sophisticated criminal that the suspected informant has been talking to law enforcement officials too often.

Because of the mosaic problem with FOIA and the particular threat posed by organizations with historical continuity and an institutional memory and further because use of the exemptions themselves can become a "piece of the mosaic," simply broadening existing exemptions will not cure the problem of organized crime abuse of FOIA. Accordingly, the proposed bill would exclude from disclosure all documents compiled in a lawful investigation of organized crime which are specifically designated by the Attorney General for purposes of this section.

This exclusion would apply to documents that were first generated or acquired by such law enforcement authority within 5 years of the date of the request, except where the agency determines pursuant to regulations promulgated by the Attorney General that there is an overriding public interest in earlier disclosure or in a longer exclusion not to exceed 3 years. The bill would also allow an agency to use a "no records" response to mitigate the danger that information which is innocuous on its face could be ultimately harmful when considered in connection with the totality of information which the requester possesses.

ADDITIONAL EXEMPTION

CURRENT LAW

The existing statute does not adequately protect Secret Service records connected with its protective functions.

CURRENT POLICY IMPLICATIONS

As a result of revisions to FOIA at the end of 1974, the quality and quantity of informant cooperation with the Secret Service has diminished dramatically. Under the current FOIA, informants are increasingly reluctant to come forward because they are fearful their identities will be revealed, adversely affecting the Service's ability to perform their protective and criminal investigative missions.

Robert R. Burke, Assistant Director for Investigations at the Secret Service, testified before the Constitution Subcommittee that his agency had approximately 75 percent less informant information than it had before the revised FOIA took effect at the end of 1974. Mr. Stewart Knight, Director of the Service, testified in 1977 that he had recommended that President Jimmy Carter refrain from traveling to two cities within the United States because the Service did not have adequate information to guarantee his safety. Mr. Burke's 1981 testimony noted that conditions have deteriorated even further since Mr. Knight's statement.

BILL PROVISION

The bill also adds an additional exemption (b)(11) to FOIA which insures that the Secret Service will receive the cooperation and confidentiality necessary for its mission. As a result, the ability of the Secret Service to safeguard the President and other important individuals as well as informants who provide vital information, will not be compromised. The exemption specifically enables the Secret Service to better fulfill its functions in two ways. First, the Service will not be compelled to disclose significant security information already on file. Second, the Secret Service's information gathering capacity will be enhanced by the message conveyed to potential informants that any sensitive information that they provide will be protected.

REASONABLY SEGREGABLE

CURRENT LAW

The 1974 amendments to FOIA added a requirement that any portions of requested record that are "reasonably segregable" from exempt portions should be supplied to the requester.

CURRENT POLICY IMPLICATIONS

Although the principle of reasonable segregability is laudable, it can in practice present problems in the fields of law enforcement and national security classifications. In those fields, a sophisticated requester may have the ability to piece together bits of information that seem harmless in isolation yet reveal exempt information when carefully analyzed.

BILL PROVISIONS

The bill clarifies the standard of "reasonable segregability" in the case of records containing material covered by exemptions one and seven allowing the agency to consider whether the disclosure of particular information would, in the context of other information available to the requester, cause the harm specified in exemptions one and seven.

PROPER REQUESTS

CURRENT LAW

Under current law, an agency is required to comply with a request for records made by any person, even if that person is not a U.S. person or if that person is engaged in litigation and has discovery rights.

CURRENT POLICY IMPLICATIONS

Existing law allows foreign nationals and governments to make FOIA requests. It is not at all uncommon for one Japanese firm to file a FOIA request seeking information about another Japanese firm or even a U.S. firm with which it competes.

Another aspect of the any person provision that seems somewhat inconsistent with FOIA's goals of an informed citizenry is that the act is heavily used by imprisoned felons. Over 40 percent of all requests received by the Drug Enforcement Administration are from persons in prison; 11 percent of FBI's requests come from prisoners. In many cases, these requesters seek information that could undermine legitimate law enforcement.

Parties to a lawsuit have used FOIA to circumvent discovery rules. The Supreme Court has stated that "FOIA was not intended to function as a private discovery tool." NLRB v. Robbins Tire, 437 U.S. 214, 242 (1978). Using FOIA as a discovery device can be a technique to avoid triggering reciprocal discovery.

BILL PROVISIONS

The bill modified that aspect of the any person rule that permits aliens to use the U.S. FOIA statute. The Attorney General is granted authority to draft regulations to limit requests by imprisoned felons. This bill also specifies that foreign nationals are not proper requesters and sets guidelines for FOIA access by litigants attempting to circumvent discovery procedures.

PUBLICATION OF EXEMPTION 3 STATUTES

CURRENT LAW

Any information exempted from disclosure by other statutes is exempt from disclosure under FOIA's third exemption.

CURRENT POLICY

No authoritative listing of all potential statutes which may designate information as exempt from FOIA's disclosure provisions has been compiled.

BILL PROVISIONS

The bill requires each agency to make such a listing and requires the Department of Justice to publish a final compilation of this list in the Federal Register. No agency may rely on any statute to exempt information from disclosure if the statute is not on the Federal Register list.

CONCLUSION

The basic purpose of FOIA, more openness in government through an informed citizenry (see National Labor Relations Board v. Robbins Tire & Rubber Co., 437 U.S. 214, 242 (1918) is a very worthy and legitimate objective.

> Knowledge will forever govern ignorance, and a people who mean to be their own governors must arm themselves with the power knowledge gives. A popular government without popular information or the means of acquiring it is but a prologue to a farce or a tragedy or perhaps both. Letter to W. T. Barry, Lieutenant Governor of Kentucky, August 4, 1822.

This inspiring quote, although written by Madison as an argument for public education, not access to government files, was invoked in 1974 when the 1966 act was substantially rewritten as an appropriate reminder that our national policy favors an open and free exchange of ideas. In fact, another enduring passage would serve well to remind us of the origins of our Nation's policy on freedom of information. That passage reads as follows:

> Congress shall make no law . . . abridging the Freedom of speech, or of the press. U.S. Constitution, First Amendment.

Besides the obvious virtues of an open government, the Freedom of Information Act [FOIA] is particularly valuable to a nation founded on individual freedom and government accountability. President Reagan has reinvigorated our awareness that the Federal Government must be held accountable for its activities. Otherwise, it could become master rather than servant of the people. In the context of this refreshing new attitude of the Reagan administration, I would like to share a favorite passage from American literature. Henry David Thoreau wrote:

> I went to the store the other day to buy a bolt for our front door, for, as I told the storekeeper, the governor was coming here. "Aye," said he, "and the Legislature too." "Then I will take two bolts," said I. He said that there had been a steady demand for bolts and locks of late, for our protectors were coming. H. Thoreau, Walden and Civil Disobedience, (O. Thomas ed. 1966).

The Freedom of Information Act can often act like one of Thoreau's bolts; it can protect us from our protectors by giving us sound knowledge about how to comply with Government regulations or how to challenge an arbitrary Government decision.

Yet achieving an informed citizenry is a goal to be balanced with other vital societal aims. Indeed, society's interest in an open government can conflict with its interest in protecting personal privacy rights or with the overriding public need for preserving the confidentiality of criminal investigative matters.

Though tensions among these competing interests are characteristic of a democratic society their resolution lies in providing a workable formula which encompasses, balances, and appropriately protects all interests, while placing emphasis on fully responsible disclosure. (See S. Rept. 813, 89th Congress, 1st session 3 (1965)).

Just as the Freedom of Information Act holds the Government accountable to an informed electorate, FOIA itself must be held accountable. Since the enthusiastic rewrite of the act in 1974, it has at times frustrated rather than fulfilled its basic mission of ensuring Government efficiency and informing voters. FOIA has occasionally disrupted vital law enforcement activities and has been misused by businesses who had no intention of keeping abreast of Government programs but found it a convenient tool for obtaining confidential information about a competitor.

This bill restores the balance between public access to Government information and efficient execution of necessary functions. The compromises agreed to in an effort to accommodate the competing interests of open government and confidentiality represent a good-faith effort on all sides to mold a better FOIA. This bill achieves that goal and therefore furthers our deeply engrained notions of an informed citizenry and a responsible government.

To provide more information about the intent of this bill, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the remarks of the current Deputy Attorney General supporting its provisions.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT OF CAROL E. DINKINS, DEPUTY ATTORNEY GENERAL

Mr. Chairman and Members of the Subcommittee:

I am pleased to appear before you today to testify in support of S. 774, a bill to amend the Freedom of Information Act. This bill sets forth a number of crucial and needed reforms in the provisions of that Act, while preserving entirely the salutary objectives of the FOIA in maintaining an informed citizenry. After careful consideration and refinement, this bill was unanimously approved by the Senate on February 27 of this year.

Former Assistant Attorney General Jonathan Rose appeared before this Subcommittee in July of 1981 to discuss proposed amendments to the FOIA then under consideration by the Administration. He told you then—and I emphasize today—that this Administration is firmly committed to the faithful implementation of the Freedom of Information Act by all federal agencies. We strongly support the basic purpose and philosophy of the Act: to inform the public as fully as possible of the conduct of its government in order to protect the integrity and effectiveness of the government itself. We are fully committed to carrying out the objectives and spirit of the Act.

We continue to strongly support this bill and we believe that it represents a successful compromise between the government's need to maintain the confidentiality of important law enforcement information and the public's right to know about the operations of its government. S. 774 also contains many needed procedural reforms of the FOIA, including measures that would permit businesses that submit confidential information to the government to receive notice of its impending disclosure, allow the government to recoup a greater portion of the costs of processing many FOIA requests, and create more realistic time limits for the government to respond to FOIA requests.

I. EFFORTS BY THE DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE TO IMPLEMENT THE FOIA

Previous witnesses before the Subcommittee have raised certain concerns over the administration of the Act, suggesting that any revision to the FOIA is too controversial to consider at this time. They have pointed to a few anecdotes of delays in receiving responses or instances of perceived resistance by some government personnel, and they have then suggested that no amendment to the Act be made.

Who could doubt that some instances can be found where persons have encountered unnecessary difficulties in obtaining information under the Act? The administrative mechanisms of the various agencies of the government to implement the FOIA may not be perfect, but I submit that the few anecdotes that have been shared with the Subcommittee simply do not tell the full story.

For our part, the Department of Justice is engaged in a multifaceted effort to improve both the propriety and the accuracy of agency actions under the Act, pursuant to our statutory mandate to encourage agencies to comply with the FOIA (see 5 U.S.C. § 552(d)). Expert Department employees conduct a comprehensive series of seminars and course instructions to train the personnel of other agencies on their proper responsibilities under the Act. We also publish an informative quarterly newsletter, FOIA Update, which is given wide circulation within the Executive Branch and sets forth the Department's guidance on a wide variety of issues, plus an inclusive FOIA Case List of judicial decisions and an analytical "Short Guide to the FOIA" describing the Act's substantive and procedural aspects. Our Office of Information and Privacy also responds to more than one thousand calls per year from agency personnel requesting advice on specific FOIA issues. We believe that these efforts contribute considerably to improving the administration of the FOIA by the various agencies.

Within the Department, the Office of Information and Privacy reviews all appeals of denials by any component of the Department of Justice. That Office is responsible for monitoring both the substantive decisions of the Department's various bureaus and divisions, and the timeliness of their responses.

Of course, the Department has no direct binding authority over the actions of the other Executive agencies, and those agencies must be free to exercise the judgment and expertise in their own fields of responsibility. But we do have authority to review the proposed litigation positions of all Executive agencies, where the Department of Justice represents them in court. Thus, although a relatively rare occurrence, the Department on occasion has declined to defend an agency's actions and has instead required settlement of a case.

II. OBSERVATIONS ON FOIA REFORM

The Department of Justice therefore welcomes these hearings and the opportunity to present for the benefit of the Subcommittee some of the facts about the administration of the FOIA. The agencies of the government, and the Department of Justice in particular, are in an excellent position to evaluate the effects of that Act. Persons who request information understandably can see only the delay in receiving a response, or the fact that some of the information they requested was withheld. Only those who take into consideration the perspective of the agency as well can fully understand why certain information is properly and necessarily withheld.

In considering the purposes of the FOIA, it is essential to keep in mind that the Act is not, and never could be, a statute with the single-minded purpose of disclosing government information. We all would agree, I am sure, that many kinds of information that the government has in its possession must be kept confidential, in order to protect important public interests. For example, agencies often must withhold information to protect the privacy of innocent third parties, to maintain the confidentiality of trade secrets, to avoid the disclosure of information affecting the security of the nation, or to prevent interference with pending civil, criminal, or administrative investigations, and protect the identities of confidential sources involved in any type of these investigations.

As important as the goal of openness may be, the countervailing interest in protecting such information from disclosure often can be even more important. Government functions would be impaired, for example, if the tax records or census responses of individuals were made public merely for the asking, if businesses could readily obtain the trade secrets of their competitors, or if the government were required to disclose the identities of its confidential informants.

The FOIA, then, reflects a balance between two sets of public and governmental goals. It is not a matter of a struggle of good against evil, but a balancing of two good objectives. Amendments to the Act, therefore, cannot reasonably be evaluated by the simplistic measure of whether they provide for more or less disclosure. The proper standard is whether the proposed amendments will bring about a better balance between the several purposes of the Act. And in that analysis, it is not a sufficient answer to a problem to say, "There already is an exemption that covers that." The pertinent inquiry is whether or not that existing exemption is in point of fact functioning the way Congress intended, to protect against the designated harm. In many respects, we submit that such a careful evaluation of the FOIA indicates that certain aspects of the Act indeed are not functioning as Congress intended and instead disserve the public interest.

III. DISCUSSION OF SPECIFIC FOIA REFORMS

Having discussed briefly the Department's general experience under the FOIA, and our efforts to encourage compliance by the Department and by other agencies, let me turn now to a discussion of the specific legislative proposals that the Senate has unanimously approved. We candidly admit that these provisions would not solve all of the Department's concerns, particularly in the law enforcement area where the ingenuity of many criminals threatens the Department's ability to protect its essential investigatory information. We do believe, however, that these revisions would make an enormous improvement in those cases, such as organized crime, where the Department is most concerned about the adverse and unintended effects of the FOIA.

There is a long history of proposals to amend the FOIA. In the years following the substantial broadening of the Act in 1974, the Department of Justice and the government as a whole began to experience serious problems with some of the requirements and language of the FOIA. A study begun in 1979, following testimony before Congress, led former Attorney General Civiletti to prepare a comprehensive package of proposed amendments to the FOIA, recommending very substantial changes in the Act. I think it is important to remember that the Civiletti proposals were not so very different from the provisions of S. 774; indeed, in many respects they were more far-reaching.

When this Administration assumed office, the Department of Justice commenced an independent review of the problems that the FOIA has raised. As a result of that review, we concluded that the FOIA has indeed created serious problems for the federal government; however, we also found that—as serious as these problems were—they also tend to be narrow enough to be remedied without a wholesale revision of the FOIA. Accordingly, in October 1981, the Department testified before the Senate Subcommittee on the Constitution to present the Administration's proposed amendments to the FOIA. That proposal was introduced in the 97th Congress as S. 1751 and H.R. 4505.

The Senate's Subcommittee on the Constitution gave extensive consideration to the issues relating to amendments to the FOIA, holding numerous days of hearings on all aspects of the proposals, hearings which fully considered all viewpoints.

As a result of this extensive consideration, many of the Administration's proposals were soon incorporated into existing FOIA reform legislation, S. 1730. Commendably, Senator Hatch and his colleagues, particularly Senator DeConcini and Senator Leahy, carefully engrafted our proposals onto the provisions of S. 1730, producing a compromise set of proposed amendments to the FOIA that were drawn as narrowly as possible. The central purpose of our common efforts was to ensure that the changes made to correct the deficiencies of the FOIA should not inadvertently infringe upon the overriding purposes of the Act.

The final version of S. 1730 was an excellent example of carefully drafted remedial legislation. We at the Department of Justice found that the bill redressed most, although not all, of the serious problems we had encountered with the FOIA. For example, Director Webster of the FBI described the compromise as "an 8 on a scale of 10." Similarly, the various interest groups that initially had opposed any amendments to the Act acknowledged the compromise bill as a responsible and even-handed approach to reform of the FOIA.

The present bill, S. 774, is almost identical to S. 1730 from the last Congress. Three changes in the text of the bill were made by the Senate Judiciary Committee: first, a somewhat technical amendment changing the language of Exemption 7(C) from "would" to "could reasonably be expected to" result in an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy; second a provision preventing an agency from retaining any of the FOIA fees they collect if it is found not to be in "substantial compliance" with the time limit provisions of the Act; and third a provision requiring agencies to list in the Federal Register the Exemption 3 statutes upon which they intend to rely. With these few changes, the bill again was approved unanimously by the Senate Committee on the Judiciary. On February 27, 1984, the full Senate approved the measure by voice vote, with only two other changes striking the term "royalty" from section 2 of the bill, and deleting the proposed technological data exemption in light of the special protection for such data provided by Congress in the Defense Department's 1983 authorization bill, codified at 10 U.S.C. § 140c.

Before turning to a summary of the specifics of this bill, I note that the Senate Judiciary Committee has amassed a considerable amount of testimony and other evidence during the course of considering this bill, comprising two volumes of hearings during the 97th Congress, and one volume of hearings in this Congress. Those hearings already have developed a substantial amount of the evidence in support of the reforms in S. 774.

Law enforcement. The FOIA has become a major problem to the government's law enforcement agencies. The FBI has found that 15% of the FOIA requests it receives are from criminals incarcerated in prison. In the case of the Drug Enforcement Administration, this number is even higher: 58% of the FOIA requests the DEA receives are from prisoners and another 21% from known drug traffickers. The frequency with which criminals use the FOIA is itself an indicator of its usefulness to them.

However, there also is direct evidence that the FOIA has been directly harmful to law enforcement efforts. In the course of the hearings held last Congress on S. 1730, the Department provided to the Senate judiciary Committee a list of over 200 documented cases where the FOIA had a harmful impact on law enforcement activities. These are not isolated anecdotes, but rather are a stark reflection of the adverse effects of the Act in the specific area of criminal law enforcement. Moreover, in an executive session of the Senate Subcommittee, Director Webster of the FBI provided additional examples of the use of the FOIA by criminals, terrorist groups, and hostile foreign intelligence agencies. That information is available to this Subcommittee. In February 1982, the DEA released a study it had conducted that found that 14% of the DEA's investigations were aborted, narrowed, compromised, or significantly complicated by the FOIA.

The problems the FOIA creates for law enforcement agencies are especially acute when organized crime uses the Act to discover what the government knows about its activities and members. Organized criminal groups engage in a wide range of illegal activities and often have a long institutional memory. As a consequence, otherwise innocuous information that the government discloses under the FOIA to a member of an organized crime family or a drug trafficking conspiracy often can be pieced together with information already known to the requester to form a "mosaic" that reveals the identities of the government's confidential informants or the scope of the government's investigation.

S. 774 has several types of provisions that address the concerns regarding law enforcement information. The provisions of Exemption 7 would be modified slightly—not revised wholesale as some observers have asserted. The introductory language of the provision would be revised to include law enforcement information other than that developed in the course of a specific investigation—for example, manuals of procedure or statements of prosecutorial priorities. Several of the specific standards of harm in Exemption 7 would be revised to cover information that "could reasonably be expected to" cause the specific harm—e.g., identify confidential informants—rather than the present standard that disclosure would cause that harm. The government of course would continue to bear the burden of proof in all cases, but this restatement of the necessary showing would give more appropriate recognition to the uncertainties that all too often prevail in the course of criminal investigations. Requiring certainty that disclosure would identify a confidential informant is too high a standard; it should be sufficient that a reasonable person reasonably would expect that result.

The Department of Justice believes that the bill will go a long way towards closing this very critical gap in the government's ability to maintain the confidentiality of its law enforcement files.

Secret Service files. In past testimony before Congress, the Secret Service has revealed that many local police departments no longer share information with them because they believe that the Service will not be able to protect the information from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA. By 1977, according to its testimony, the Secret Service had lost so much useful information of this type that it recommended against visits by President Carter to two cities because of fears that the Service could not protect the President's personal safety. Moreover, in 1981 the Secret Service testified that its informant information had dropped by 75 percent since the passage of the 1974 amendments to the FOIA. We endorse S. 774's provisions granting broader protection to the files the Secret Service compiles in connection with its protective functions.

Commercial information. Every year, thousands of businesses submit to the government many of their most important and confidential trade secrets and business records. However, there is no requirement in the FOIA that the government must notify these companies when it intends to release this information to the public. The seriousness of this shortcoming was shown by the first panel of witnesses before this Subcommittee at the hearing held this past May, who pointed to a number of concerns resulting from a lack of notice to submitters of sensitive business secrets prior to dissemination, and the resulting inability to oppose the disclosure either before the agency or in court. Moreover, providing submitters an opportunity to object to disclosure should lead to improved administrative decisionmaking based upon all the relevant information.

Many of these procedural improvements can be accomplished only by legislation—for example, the provisions for judicial review of agency action. Even for those procedures that could be put in place by administrative action, the strict time limits of the Act presently make no express allowance for the time needed for the consultation process.

For these reasons, we support the bill's provisions requiring government agencies to notify businesses in advance whenever the agency intends to publicly release trade secrets or sensitive commercial information under the FOIA. S. 774 is a means to further the goal of the Act to conduct the government's business in the open. It would not create any new exemption for confidential business information. It would simple provide—just as the Administrative Procedure Act does in so many other areas—that the government will give private parties notice and an opportunity to object before it takes action affecting their interests.

Manuals and examination materials. As is explained more fully in the accompanying Detailed Analysis of S. 774, the FOIA often compels the government to release the internal manuals and instructions that government agencies give to their investigators, auditors, and negotiators. Frequently, these materials set forth the government's confidential investigatory techniques and guidelines.

Public disclosure of these manuals significantly hampers the government's ability to enforce the law, detect fraud, or acquire goods and services at competitive prices, since subjects of investigations or government suppliers may learn in advance what the government intends to do. Because of the crucial role that manuals and guidelines play in the government's law enforcement and acquisition programs, we strongly believe that they deserve more complete protection.

Personal privacy. In the normal course of government operations, numerous government agencies collect and maintain many types of personal information about individuals—whether for purposes of social insurance benefits, loan guarantees, taxation, law enforcement, federal employment, Veterans Administration medical care, or many other reasons. One can point to many laws Congress has enacted—notably the Privacy Act of 1974—that exemplify the importance all of us attach to the interest in protecting personal privacy.

But the FOIA is anomalous, because it often permits a complete stranger to obtain access to government files that contain personal information about us. Often a requester's purpose is chiefly commercial—credit bureaus, employment agencies, and life insurance companies rank among the most common users of the FOIA for this purpose—but disclosure of personal information about us is an invasion of privacy nonetheless. Any system providing for the public disclosure of government records must necessarily provide that information the government compiles about its citizens should be protected from those who would use it to invade our personal privacy.

S. 774 would amend the Act to make clear that Exemption 6 applies to all records relating to individuals, including lists that could be used for solicitation purposes. It would also amend Exemptions 6 and 7(A) to authorize withholding of personal information that "could reasonably be expected to result" in the specified harm to personal privacy interests. Although S. 774's amendments to the Act's privacy exemptions perhaps could go further—for example, by changing the Exemption 6 standard to an "unwarranted" invasion of personal privacy—we strongly support this effort to give Americans greater protection of their personal privacy.

Fees. One of the unexpected developments from the 1974 amendments to the FOIA has been the great volume of requests and the expenses of processing those requests. Congress estimated that implementation of the 1974 amendments would cost no more than $40,000 to $100,000 annually. The direct cost of compliance with the Act by all agencies rose, however, to at least $61 million by 1981, according to the General Accounting Office, and it certainly is much higher today. Frequently, the cost to the government of search and review bears little correlation to the public interest in disclosure, yet only three or four percent of this cost is typically recovered from requesters. We strongly support the goal of this bill to end public financing of requests that do not benefit the general public and to encourage all requesters to make reasonable efforts to narrow excessively broad requests.

We also endorse the bill's provision permitting an agency to charge a fair value fee for records containing commercially valuable technological information that was generated or procured by the government at substantial cost to the public, when the requester is likely to use the information for a commercial purpose and deprive the government of this commercial value. We believe that the government should not subsidize the development of commercially valuable information for the financial benefit of private commercial enterprises. We would also note that, in many cases, requests for such information deprive not only the government, but also the private firm that supplied the information to the government, of the information's commercial value. As noted earlier, the Senate has deleted the term "royalty," which caused concern among some groups as to its meaning.

Finally, I emphasize that the bill would retain the provision in the current law that requires an agency to waive or reduce existing search and duplication fees whenever a requested disclosure would primarily benefit the general public. Such waivers are intended to ensure that persons such as representatives of the media, public interest groups, and scholars have relatively inexpensive access to government records where disclosure of information to them would in turn be of primary benefit to the general public. The bill also provides for a categorical waiver of all new processing fees for researchers, journalists, and public interest groups. We believe that the bill's fee provisions overall represent a fair compromise in this sensitive area.

Time limits. The FOIA's unrealistic time limits have caused serious problems for the government and FOIA requesters alike. The short (10-day) time limit imposed on agencies for responding to and processing requests often forces agencies to respond prematurely or hurriedly. FOIA requesters, too, are dissatisfied with the present time limitations, which often mean that agencies are not in statutory compliance and occasionally have caused needless litigation. Moreover, under the "first-in, first-out" system established by the FOIA and the case law, even persons making relatively simple requests may find themselves placed at the end of the agency's backlog of requests received earlier. This may result in a delayed response as the agency strives to process earlier requests. Finally, there is currently no specific authority for agencies to extend the strict ten-day time limits in order to notify submitters of confidential business information that disclosure of their information has been requested. We endorse S. 774's approach to this problem, which establishes more realistic deadlines to guide agency conduct.

I would like to take special notice of a provision in S. 774 that, for some reason, has received little attention by the representatives of the press who testified earlier at these hearings. Several of those witnesses complained of delays experienced by journalists in obtaining information under the Act. Most often, such delays are simply the inevitable result of the large backlogs of requests pending at particular agencies, combined with the courts' requirement to handle such backlogs in a first-come, first-served manner. Although journalists generally make up a very small proportion of requests at most agencies, they are inevitably affected by the backlogs of requests by others—many of whom seek information for their own use, not for any public interest. To ease this crowding-out problem to some extent, S. 774 would provide for accelerated consideration of FOIA requests made by the news media, and others who can demonstrate a need for expedited access to government records. We believe that this measure should respond to the concerns of the journalistic community without undermining the time limit provisions of S. 774 overall.

Proper requests. S. 774 also contains three other provisions that we think are particularly important. First, the bill would permit the Attorney General to issue regulations that impose limitations upon FOIA requests by imprisoned felons, where it is determined that the limitations are needed in the interests of law enforcement and would not contravene the purposes of the Act. Second, the bill would limit the use of FOIA as a substitute for normal discovery rules by parties in litigation with the government. This would be accomplished by simply extending the rather rigid time limits of the Act with respect to requests from parties in litigation with the government who could just as easily use document discovery procedures to obtain the information. Third, S. 774 would limit the availability of the FOIA's public access provisions to United States citizens and resident aliens. We believe that this change would eliminate a number of burdensome requests now made of the government by foreign citizens and corporations.

However, it would not impinge in any sense upon the FOIA's central purpose of providing information to United States citizens about the operation of their government.

In a brief aside, Mr. Chairman, I would like to address your concern, expressed in a letter to the Attorney General after your hearings last year on the Privacy Act of 1974, about this provision limiting the strict obligations of the FOIA to those who are United States citizens or lawfully admitted resident aliens. Those hearings on the Privacy Act led you to the conclusion that, because aliens do not have enforceable rights under the Privacy Act (see 5 U.S.C. § 552a(a)(2)), they need to have continued access to records under the FOIA. We must respectfully disagree—that to cure a minor perceived shortcoming in one aspect of the Privacy Act, the FOIA must be left with an expansive, open-ended obligation to give foreigners the same complete access as citizens have to information on the United States government and to information held by our government on citizens and on domestic businesses. If access by aliens to information on themselves held by the government is a significant concern, then perhaps this Subcommittee could consider a specific amendment to resolve that concern. Let me make clear that the Department of Justice has not yet taken any position on such a change.

That very specific concern should not, however, defeat an amendment to the FOIA intended to address a far larger and quite different concern. The amendment to the FOIA at issue would not preclude aliens in all cases from obtaining information from the United States government, but simply would provide that the full panoply of special procedural and substantive rights made available by the FOIA to American citizens—strict time limits, narrow exemptions to disclosure, do novo judicial review, attorneys' fees, reduced fees, administrative sanctions for failure to disclose, and (if S. 774 were adopted) reverse FOIA procedures to protect the confidential business information of foreign corporations—need not be extended to aliens as a matter of statutory right in every case.

List of Exemption 3 Statutes. Finally, S. 774 includes a provision added by the Senate to require each agency to publish in the Federal Register, within 270 days of enactment of the subsection, a list of all statutes upon which the agency proposes to rely to withhold information under Exemption 3 of the FOIA, and a description of their scope.

While the Department of Justice does not object to the requirement that all such exemption statutes be published in the Federal Register, we would suggest that this provision be clarified to provide that an agency could rely on any of the exemption statutes published by the Department of Justice, not simply those exemption statutes commonly relied upon and listed by that agency. The gist of Section 16 is to provide a single comprehensive list of exemption statutes, not to require each agency to prepare a highly duplicative list of all of the exemption statutes that agencies governmentwide may rely on.

I hope that this summary of the important changes S. 774 would make is useful. However, I think that it also is useful to look at what S. 774 would not do. The bill would continue the substantive or procedural standards governing the disclosure of information that has been classified in the interests of national defense or foreign policy. Similarly, S. 774 would not change the scope or nature of the protections that the FOIA currently provides for trade secrets and confidential commercial information; as I have stated, the bill would do no more than give submitters of such information the right to be told of an intended disclosure and an opportunity to object. Overall, S. 774's narrowly-drawn protections should assist greatly in ensuring that agencies can strike the proper balance between the public's right to know and the government's need to maintain the confidentiality of non-public information.

In this regard, I think that it is important to point out once again just how well the Senate Committee has succeeded in striking this balance. In a study released in 1982, long before Senate passage of S. 774, a group categorically opposing any amendment of the FOIA listed over 500 instances where requesters had used the FOIA to obtain the disclosure of important government information.[1] The examples listed in the study covered the entire gamut of the information the government keeps, from consumer product safety information to national security information to tax information.

In his Senate testimony over one year ago, former Assistant Attorney General Rose explained that the Department had compared this study and S. 774 to gauge just how seriously this bill would have affected these hundreds of disclosures had it been in effect at the time. That study concluded that, of the more than 500 examples listed in the study, there were only four instances where S. 774 might have prevented the disclosure of the information in question—and in each case there were sound reasons why the information that was required to be released should have been withheld.[2]

Although the opponents of S. 774 have had ample time to judge the results for themselves, no one has disputed this conclusion. Many of the witnesses before this Subcommittee have simply given examples of their use of the FOIA and praised its availability, but have not addressed the specifics of S. 774. Other witnesses made broad, generalized assertions that the provisions of S. 774 would have unspecified adverse results, but they have not made any effort whatsoever to provide concrete examples of harm.

Contrary to those unsupported expressions of concern, we believe that the evidence presented to this Subcommittee and to the Senate Committee on the Judiciary provides more than an ample basis to conclude that the provisions of S. 774 would in fact provide for greater protection against unwarranted disclosures while at the same time preserving the goals of public access under the FOIA. S. 774 would have virtually no impact upon the truly important public disclosures under the FOIA, yet would respond to many of the more than 200 documented examples where the Act has harmed law enforcement. This bill is a well-written and much needed proposal for adjusting the balance between disclosure and confidentiality that the FOIA is meant to embody.

In conclusion, I would like to thank you, Mr. Chairman, and the members of the Subcommittee, for your consideration of the proposed amendments to the FOIA which have now been so resoundingly approved by the Senate. I fully understand and appreciate your abiding concern to preserve the letter and spirit of the Freedom of Information Act, which this Subcommittee has authored and approved. I only ask that you give equal attention to the demonstrable harmful impact that the Act has had, in ways I am sure were not intended by this Subcommittee.

In our view, and in the view of the Senate, S. 774 will give the government very real assistance in preserving the necessary confidentiality of the important government files relating to law enforcement and other subjects, without infringing on the Act's goals. We can see no reason to perpetuate the unintended abuses of the FOIA that our experience has uncovered. This is particularly ture when legislation is available which would significantly limit those abuses without affecting whatsoever the continued vitality of the FOIA to serve the purposes for which it was enacted: to ensure that informed citizens have the means to learn of the operations of their government and that government operates in an open and responsible manner.

We look forward to working with Congress to achieve the prompt passage of this legislation.

DETAILED ANALYSIS OF THE PROVISIONS OF S. 774

Fees and Waivers

Under existing law, agencies can collect only the costs of searching for copying requested documents, which are only a fraction of the true costs of responding to a FOIA request—less than 4 percent. The expense of reviewing documents, redacting exempt material, and performing other processing accounts for the remaining 96% of the total cost.

Section 1 would authorize agencies to recover from requesters fees which more nearly reflect the true costs of processing their FOIA requests. Besides encouraging agencies to recover a greater proportion of their costs, Section 1 would encourage all requesters to make reasonable efforts to narrow unduly broad requests.

The cost to the government of processing a request does not necessarily bear any correlation to the public interest in disclosure. The majority of all FOIA requests are filed by or on behalf of corporations for private, commercial reasons. In many instances, individuals have also made excessive use of the Act, at public expenses, for reasons that are purely personal, that serve no public interest, and that may in some cases even be contrary to the public interest. In one case, a single Freedom of Information Act re-

[2] Former Secrets, supra, pp. 53 (first and last examples) and 62 (first example), and 193 (last example). The first two examples both involved the disclosure of law enforcement files on organized crime, although it is unclear whether the particular documents that were disclosed were less than five years old, as S. 774 would require before they could be withheld. The first case involved allegations of organized crime's involvement in the American coal industry, while the second pertained to the Department of Justice's investigation of various Teamster pension funds. Both of the remaining examples are cases where internal government audit manuals were disclosed under the FOIA. The example recited on page 62 of the study was a request for an internal HUD audit manual. The example on page 193 of the study involved the disclosure of what appears to have been a multi-volume manual detailing auditing procedures for IRS agents.

In addition, there were seven examples of disclosure listed in the study where a request had been made by foreign citizens—in one case by the government of the Soviet Union and another by a suspected Palestinian terrorist. See pp. 32, 73, 101, 105, 141, 145 and 177. Under S. 774, all seven requests could have been denied because they were not made by United States citizens or resident aliens; however, the information would have continued to be available to any United States citizen or resident who made the same request.

quest for voluminous CIA documents by a renagade ex-agent, Philip Agee, cost the public nearly $500,000 to process. See Agee v. CIA, 517 F. Supp. 1335, 1342 n.5 (D.D.C. 1981).

Section 1 would allow agencies to collect "all costs reasonably and directly attributable to responding to the request, which shall include reasonable standard charges for the costs of services by agency personnel in search, duplication, and other processing of the request." The bill includes several provisions constraining an agency's authority to collect fees. First, no charge may be made in connection with any request that requires no more than two hours of agency processing time and for which no more than twenty pages are released. Second, any processing charges must be reasonable, standard charges and must be limited to services directly attributable to responding to the request. Third, the term "processing" is defined to exclude services of agency personnel in resolving issues of law or policy of general applicability in responding to a request. Thus, a requester would not be charged for an agency's costs in establishing or rethinking a policy of general applicability, even if the request triggers such agency action. However, a requester could be charged the costs of review and redaction of documents pursuant to established agency policy.

Fee waivers. The bill retains essentially the same standard as in current law for waivers of search and copying fees. An automatic waiver of the new processing fees would be made for noncommercial requests by (1) individuals or institutions conducting scholarly or scientific research, (2) journalists, and (3) non-profit groups intending to make information publicly available. The bill would not affect the ability of individuals to obtain records about themselves under the Privacy Act of 1974 for only the cost of copying the record. See 5 U.S.C. § 552a(f)(5).

Commercially valuable information. Section 1 also permits an agency to charge additional fees for information that has a commercial market value and has been compiled by the government at substantial expense to the taxpayer. This provision carries out the existing federal policy enunciated in 31 U.S.C. § 3302 (1982), and would avoid the anomaly in current law that permits a requester to reap personal profit from valuable technological information that all taxpayers paid to develop, and which he obtained at fees reflecting little more than the cost of duplication. The term "royalty" was deleted from this provision by the Senate.

Partial retention of fees. Finally, section 1 permits each agency to retain one-half of the fees collected under the FOIA to defray in part the agency's expenses in complying with the Act. This provision would not apply if the agency was found by the Office of Management and Budget or the General Accounting Office not to be in "substantial compliance" with the time limits of the FOIA.

Time Limits

Section 2 of the bill, while retaining the existing 10-day requirement for an initial response to a request, also provides more realistic time limits for processing burdensome FOIA requests and provides for expedited processing of requests that are made in the public interest.

The complexity and sheer volume of the requests received by many agencies often prevent compliance with the current time limits. Recognizing the inherent inability of many agencies to process requests within the specified time limits, many courts have freed agencies of the need to comply with time limits by resorting to use of the "exceptional circumstances" and "due diligence" provisions in section 552(a)(6)(C). In the leading case, Open America v. Watergate Special Prosecution Force, 547 F.2d 605, 616 (D.C. Cir. 1976), the court ruled that an agency exercising due diligence in processing a great volume of FOIA requests is not strictly bound by the ten-day provision; the agency may process them on a "first-in, first-out" basis, unless the requester can demonstrate to a court "exceptional need or urgency" for preferential treatment.

The present, very short time limits in the FOIA may cause agencies to process requests hurriedly, thereby increasing the likelihood of premature denials, unnecessary litigation, and serious errors. The inevitable delays at many agencies have led many requesters to a general dissatisfaction with the Act's operation, as well as to some needless litigation. Finally, the present "first-in, first-out" system prevents agencies that have a backlog of requests from responding promptly to many requests from the public and the news media, unless the requester can demonstrate "exceptional need or urgency."

Accordingly, Section 2 of the bill would allow an agency, in the case of "unusual circumstances," to extend its deadline from ten to thirty days. It would also specifically recognize an extension of the time limits on account of a substantial backlog of requests. Section 2 also would require each agency to promulgate regulations to provide that requesters who demonstrate a compelling need for expedited processing should be given processing priority over other requesters.

Business Confidentiality Procedures

Section 3 of the bill establishes a procedural route for the protection of confidential business information, requiring agencies to provide notice, an opportunity to object, and an opportunity to bring suit to oppose disclosure. However, the bill would not alter the substantive standard of Exemption 4.

Under these procedures, the submitter must designate, at the time of submission or thereafter, the information that is exempt under Exemption 4. The agency, upon receiving a request for the disclosure of such information, shall notify the submitter of the request, describe the nature and scope of the request, and inform the submitter of his right to object to disclosure. Notice to submitters is not required in five specified circumstances. Whenever the agency determines to disclose such information, notwithstanding the objections of a submitter, the agency must give the submitter at least ten working days notice of intent to disclose. Nothing in these procedures alters other rights established by law protecting the confidentiality of private information—such as the Trade Secrets Act, 18 U.S.C. § 1905, the Census Act, 13 U.S.C. § 301, or the Internal Revenue Code, 26 U.S.C. § 6103.

These provisions would permit a submitter, who is frequently more aware of the commercial value of information than is the government, to inform the government why the submitter believes the information should not be released. For these reasons, these proposed provisions should be beneficial not only to the submitter, but also to the government.

Judicial Review

Section 4 of the bill would amend section 552(a)(4)(B) of the Act to include a limitation period of 180 days for judicial review of an agency's denial of a request for disclosure. This is for administrative efficiency, to allow the closing of old request files, but would not prejudice requesters. The 180 day period is the same as that set forth in a number of other administrative enforcement provisions. See, e.g., 42 U.S.C. §§ 2000e-5(e) and 2000e-16(c) (Title VII employment discrimination); 42 U.S.C. § 3612(a) (housing discrimination); and 29 U.S.C. § 633a(d) (age discrimination).

Section 4 also would amend the FOIA to provide district court jurisdiction over suits to enjoin disclosure of trade secrets or other commercially valuable information provided to the government by a submitter. Currently, submitters have no direct right of action but must resort to an action under the Administrative Procedure Act, 5 U.S.C. § 706, to enjoin violations of the Trade Secrets Act, 18 U.S.C. § 1905. See Chrysler Corp. v. Brown, 441 U.S. 281, 285, 317-18 (1979). The bill would also provide for notice to both submitters and requesters that a suit to enjoin the withholding or disclosure of records has been filed, and for the district courts to have personal jurisdiction, in any suit filed under the Act, over all requesters and submitters of particular information. These proposed provisions would ensure that an adverse party, whether submitter or requester, would receive notice of the complaint, have the right to intervene, and be bound by the court's decision.

Section 4 would also amend the provision of the Act authorizing the award of attorney fees in favor of a requester who "substantially prevails" in the litigation to authorize the award of attorney fees against submitters, as well as against the government. Thus, in disputes between a submitter and a requester, where the government's position is essentially that of a stakeholder of the disputed information, this provision would allow the court to charge the costs and attorney fees of a requester who substantially prevails against a submitter rather than against the United States. As under present law, the provision would authorize the award of attorney fees only in favor of requesters who substantially prevail, and even then the award would be discretionary.

Public Record Requests

Section 5 of S. 774 would amend the FOIA to eliminate the need for federal agencies to retrieve, duplicate, and mail records that are already publicly available. Requests that agencies disclose such documents often require employees to duplicate hundreds of pages of newspaper and magazine articles that a requester, with no greater effort, could locate and copy at the nearest public library. As Professor (now Circuit Judge Antonin Scalia observed, there is no reason why federal agencies should be compelled to act as "the world's largest library reference system." [1] In the case of public record items such as newspaper clippings and court records, Section 5 would implement that recommendation by allowing agencies the choice of providing an index identifying the date and source of public records (but only if the index already is in existence) or producing copies of the documents.

Clarify Exemptions

Section 6 of the bill merely clarifies the fact that the compulsory disclosure requirements of the Act do not apply to the exemptions listed in the paragraphs of section 552(b).

Manuals and Examination Materials

Section 7 of S. 774 would make clear that materials whose confidentiality is necessary to effective law enforcement and other vital government functions are exempt from disclosure. Such materials include manuals and instructions to investigators, inspectors, auditors, and negotiators. Although materials of this nature are arguably protected under present law, the courts are divided over the application of Exemption 2 law enforcement manuals [2] and to audit guidelines.[3]

This confusion reflects the conflicting legislative history of Exemption 2. According to the Senate committee report, it was intended to relate only to internal personnel rules and practices of an agency, such as the agency's rules about it employees' use of parking facilities or its policies concerning sick leave.[4] The House committee report, on the other hand, stated that the exemption should protect from disclosure the operating rules, guidelines, and manuals of procedure for government investigators or examiners.[5] Moreover, a related provision of the Act, subsection (a) (2) (C) (which requires an agency to make available to the public "administrative" staff manuals and instructions to staff that affect a member of the public) implies a distinction for law enforcement manuals or guidelines for auditing and inspection procedures.

The bill would resolve this confusion by expressly protecting confidential information in manuals and instructions to investigators, inspectors, auditors, and negotiators from disclosure. This change complements the amendment to Exemption 7(E) relating to guidelines for law enforcement investigations or prosecutions. See generally, Crooker v. Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco & Firearms, 670 F.2d 1051 (D.C. Cir. 1981). The inclusion of negotiators in this list reflects the government's legitimate need to maintain the confidentially of its instructions to staff in contexts other than law enforcement, such as government procurement programs. The term "negotiators" should include not only law enforcement personnel who are called upon to negotiate the settlement of pending and impending litigation, but also agency staff who conduct negotiations for the procurement of goods and services, the acquisition of lands, the resolution of labor-management disputes, the release of hostages, or any other negotiations conducted in the course of carrying out a legitimate government function where the release of such instruction or manuals may jeopardize the success of the negotiations.

The addtion of Exemption 3(B), relating to testing or examination materials used to determine individual qualifications for employment, promotion, and licensing, would protect from disclosure materials that would compromise the objectivity or fairness of the testing, examination, or licensing process within various agencies. A similar provision exists in the Privacy Act of 1974, 5 U.S.C. § 552a(k)(6).

Personal Privacy

Section 8 of the bill changes the FOIA's personal privacy exemption (Exemption 6) in three respects. The change in the threshold language to cover all "records or information concerning individuals" and to eliminate the existing "similar files" language is intended to reinforce the correctness of the Supreme Court's decision in United States Department of State v. Washington Post Co., 456 U.S. 595 (1982, where the Court repudiated a formalistic reading of "similar files" by the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit.

The bill also would reconcile the FOIA and the Privacy Act on the matter of disclosure of lists of names and addresses. The Privacy Act of 1974, 5 U.S.C. § 552a(n), currently provides that "[a]n individual's name and address may not be sold or rented by an agency unless such action is specifically authorized by law," and the accompanying Senate Committee Report stated that the disclosure of mailing lists by the government is "totally inconsistent with the purposes of the bill." [6] Nevertheless, some courts have required such disclosure.[7] This provision should provide somewhat greater protection against this abuse by making agencies' disclosure of such lists expressly subject to FOIA Exemption 6. This would be in line with the Third Circuit's conclusion that the disclosure of mailing lists is "wholly unrelated to the purposes behind the Freedom of Information Act and was never contemplated by Congress in enacting the Act," [8] and the Ninth Circuit's recent decision that "commercial interest should not weigh in favor of mandating disclosure of a name and address list. . . . FOIA was not intended to require release of otherwise private information to one who intends to use it solely for personal gain."[9]

Section 8 also modifies the standard of proof by allowing agencies to withhold records when disclosure "could reasonably be expected to" result in a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. Despite the importance of the right to individual privacy, which Congress has sought to protect in the Privacy Act of 1974, 5 U.S.C. § 552a, and the Right to Financial Privacy Act of 1978, 12 U.S.C. § 3401, et seq., many credit bureaus, employment agencies, and other third parties routinely attempt to use the FOIA to acquire financial and personal information about individuals. The current law, which has been construed as "an imposing barrier to nondisclosure" that weighs "heavily in favor of disclosure," [10] hinders the government's ability to protect individuals legitimate privacy interests. Although it retains the "clearly unwarranted" language, the language of Section 8 allows greater leeway to protect the rights of individuals against inquiring third parties by permitting agencies to withhold information whenever disclosure "could reasonably be expected" to cause a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy.

Law Enforcement

Section 9 of the bill makes several significant improvements in the language of Exemption 7, which protect law enforcement files from mandatory disclosure. Exemption 7 authorizes the withholding of law enforcement investigatory records only to the extent the government can demonstrate that one or more of six specific categories of harm will be caused by the release. While this exemption is intended to protect the government's important law enforcement interests, it has proved to be inadequate in practice.

The Department of Justice has extensive experience with the problems caused by the application of FOIA to criminal law enforcement agencies. Of the more than 61,000 requests for access to records of the Department received in 1982, a significant portion were directed specifically to the Department's criminal investigatory agencies, the Federal Bureau of Investigation (which received over 15,000 such requests) and the Drug Enforcement Administration. Significantly, a large number of these requests—nearly 80 percent at the DEA—were from convicted felons or from individuals whom the FBI and DEA believe to be connected with criminal activities. Such requesters have made extensive use of FOIA to obtain investigatory records about themselves or to learn the scope of ongoing investigations, identify government informants, and uncover government law enforcement techniques. One suspected organized crime "hit man" has filed over 137 FOIA requests for this purpose, and others have boasted that they have used the FOIA for the purpose of identifying informants.

A mainstay of law enforcement today is the volunteered statements and background information provided to federal agencies by confidential sources, particularly for key criminal enterprises relating to narcotics, organized crime, and extremist violence. However, because of the large volume of FOIA requests from known or suspected criminals, many sources—private citizens and "street" informants alike—have become reluctant to assist the FBI or DEA because of fears that the government cannot protect their identities. Moreover, this perception exists not only among individual informants, but also state and local law enforcement agencies, who fear losing their own sources of information when the federal government discloses the information they have.

S. 774 would close gaps in the coverage of Exemption 7, helping to give better protection to law enforcement files and to dispel perceptions that the government cannot protect the identities of its confidential sources. The current threshold language of Exemption 7 means that records are eligible for protection only if they are "investigatory records" compiled for law enforcement purposes. See FBI v. Abramson, 456 U.S. 615 (1982). The bill would eliminate this "investigatory" requirement and would apply Exemption 7 generally to all "records or information" compiled for law enforcement purposes. This language would expand the categories of documents eligible for protection under Exemption 7 to include certain types of background information, law enforcement manuals, procedures, and guidelines.

Pending investigations. Section 9 also amends the language of Exemption 7(A) to ensure better that ongoing law enforcement investigations will not be compromised by the FOIA. The standard of harm would be changed from the present test—whether or not disclosure "would" interfere with a pending proceeding—to exempt all records or information the disclosure of which "could reasonably be expected to" interfere with enforcement proceedings. Even so, this change in the standard of harm, as welcome as it is, would not protect law enforcement agencies against the burden of responding to FOIA requests by the targets of law enforcement investigations—a practice that can significantly hinder the agency's conduct of ongoing investigations.[11]

Confidential sources. Similarly, Exemption 7(D) would be amended from its current language protecting against disclosure of information that "would" disclose the identity of a confidential source. Under S. 774, an agency could withhold information that "could reasonably be expected to disclose the identity of a confidential source"—including information that may not itself identify an informant but that, when viewed in context with other information known to a requester, could enable a requester to piece together facts that reveal the identity of an informant. The bill would also confirm that state, local, foreign governments and private institutions can be "confidential sources" within the meaning of Exemption 7.

Law enforcement guidelines. The bill would amend Exemption 7(E) to grant broader protection to records containing statements of law enforcement or prosecutorial guidelines. This would fill the gaps in the current language of Exemption 7(E), whose limitation to "investigative techniques and procedures" has proven insufficient to protect many sensitive law enforcement materials from disclosure.[12]

Personal safety. The current language in Exemption 7(F) exempts records only if their disclosure would endanger the life of a law enforcement officer. However, the exemption does not give similar protection to the life of any other person. S. 774 expands Exemption 7(F) to include such persons as witnesses, potential witnesses, and family members whose personal safety is of central importance to the law enforcement process.

Informant files. Under current law, criminal organizations can use the Act to attempt to uncover suspected informants in their midsts simply by asking for the records of individuals whom they suspect of being informants. In such cases, it is not sufficient that the FBI could respond that it is withholding the informant's file under Exemption 7(D), because the very step of specifying that exemption identifies the person as a confidential source. The bill would add a new subsection (a)(9) to the FOIA that would solve this problem by excluding the informant files of law enforcement agencies from the scope of the Act whenever those records are requested by a third party according to the informant's name or personal identifier. Under this amendment, the agency could properly limit its response to any collateral records or, if no such other records exist, properly respond that it has no records responsive to the FOIA request.

Organized Crime

Law enforcement agencies have found that organized criminal elements have attempted to use the Freedom of Information Act to uncover government informants in their midsts or to discover information concerning government investigations. Organized crime has the incentive and the resources to use the Act systematically to gather, analyze, and piece together disparate, often apparently innocuous pieces of information obtained from government files into a "mosaic" that reveals the full scope of the government's investigations and, perhaps, the identities of the government's informants. Application of the Act to such files thus presents a significant risk of inadvertent disclosure of harmful information. Indeed, in some cases, acknowledgement of the very existence or nonexistence of records relating to particular investigatory activities or designated individuals provides valuable information to ciminal organizations.

Section 13 of the bill would rectify some of these problems. The Attorney General would be authorized to designate lawful investigations of organized crime conducted for criminal law enforcement purposes for protection under a new subsection (c) of the FOIA. Any document compiled in the course of those special investigations would not be subject to disclosure under the FOIA for five years after they were generated or acquired. (The subsection also provides for the Attorney General to promulgate regulations for an earlier disclosure, or a longer exclusion up to three more years, in cases of overriding public interest.) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, such documents must remain available for disclosure of nonexempt portions for ten years after the expiration of this exclusion.

Reasonably Segregable

Section 11 would clarify the current requirement that agencies disclose information that is reasonably segregable from exempt portions of documents. The bill authorizes agencies to take into account the potentially harmful effect of disclosing parts of sensitive law enforcement or national security records that can supply the "pieces" to complete a mosaic picture.

The purpose of the "reasonably segregable" requirement in the 1974 amendments to the Act was to require government agencies to release any meaningful portion of a requested record that could be separated from portions that were specifically exempt from disclosure. The courts have often strictly enforced this policy. While much useful and nonconfidential information has been released under this clause, both the courts and the agencies have expressed concern that some "reasonably segregable" information may actually prove threatening to national security and law enforcement interests when pieced together with other nonexempt or publicly available information.

Exemption for Secret Service Records

The bill would add a new Exemption (b)(10), intended to assist the Secret Service in maintaining the confidentiality of information required to carry out its important protective functions. The 1974 amendments to the FOIA have severely limited the amount of informant information available to the Secret Service, thereby jeopardizing its ability to safeguard the President and other important individuals.

Proper Requests

Section 12 of the bill would amend the provisions of subsection (a)(3) of the Act to address three important types of use or abuse of the Act not foreseen by Congress.

Under current law, an agency is required to comply with any request for records covered by the FOIA made by "any person." The bill would amend the Act to require the agency to make information available only to a requester who is a "United States person." Restricting the right to make requests to United States persons would reverse the present rule that "any person," including foreign nationals and governments, can use the FOIA to secure information. This proposed amendment is consistent with the purpose of the FOIA to inform the American public of government actions. It would also prevent the use of the FOIA by foreign nationals and governments for purposes which may be contrary to our national interest.

Section 12 would also amend the Act to limit the ability of a party to a pending judicial proceeding or administrative adjudication, or any requester acting for such a party, to use the Freedom of Information Act for any records which may be sought through discovery in the proceeding. Many government agencies report significant numbers of such requests, whose purpose is often to avoid applicable rules of discovery and sometimes—where the government is a party—to harass and burden government agencies. The bill would toll the FOIA time limits for response whenever a party files a request relating to the subject matter of a pending judicial or administrative adjudication in which the government is a party and may be requested to produce the records sought. This would allow the request for records to be supervised by the judicial or administrative tribunal in conjunction with the entire proceeding.

Finally, the bill would authorize the Attorney General, by regulation, to set conditions for the use of the FOIA or the Privacy Act by imprisoned felons, to the extent that these conditions are not in derogation of the purposes of FOIA. This will authorize reasonable limitations on the use of the FOIA by prisoners to identify informers or to obtain other law enforcement information. At present, almost 60% of the FOIA requests to the DEA are from imprisoned drug offenders, and some prisoners have filed literally dozens, even hundreds, of FOIA requests.

Reporting Uniformity

Section 14 of the bill would amend the reporting requirements of subsection (d) of the FOIA to provide for the filing of reports on December 1 of each year covering the preceding fiscal, rather than calendar, year. Most agencies maintain their records on a fiscal year basis and must convert them to an annual year basis in order to comply with existing law. The amendment would remedy this problem by conforming the reporting requirement to data collection practices.

Definitions

Section 15, provides specific definitions for six critical terms and phrases to be utilized in the application of the amended Freedom of Information Act. These six phrases are: "agency," "submitter," "requester," "United States person," "working days," and "organized crime."

Publication of Exemption 3 Statutes

Section 16 provides for a new subsection (g) of the FOIA, requiring each agency to publish in the Federal Register, within 270 days of enactment of the subsection, a list of all statutes upon which the agency proposes to rely to withhold information under Exemption 3 of the FOIA, and a description of their scope. The Department of Justice shall thereupon publish a consolidated list of all such statutes. After the 270 day period, or 30 days after subsequently enacted statutes, no agency may rely upon a statute not listed as a basis for withholding information.

While the Department of Justice does not object to the requirement that all such exemption statutes be published in the Federal Register, we would suggest that this provision be clarified to provide that an agency could rely on any of the exemption statutes published by the Department of Justice, not simply those exemption statutes commonly relied upon and listed by that agency. The gist of Section 16 is to provide a single comprehensive list of exemption statutes, not to require each agency to prepare a highly duplicative list of all of the exemption statutes that agencies governmentwide may rely on.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I am pleased to again offer my support for the Freedom of Information Act, which will have the effect if passed into law of clarifying and improving our Nation's information policy. This bill is the result of extensive input from among others, representatives of business, media, law enforcement, and public interest groups. Their views, expressed publicly in several days of hearings, have enabled the fashioning of a bill that contains improvements targeted to the interests of each of these groups.

I wish to especially commend Senator HATCH for his diligence in resolving the difficult issues involved in this Act. Bipartisan efforts in the past two Congresses have produced a fair and workable piece of legislation which garnered unanimous support from the Judiciary Committee and the full Senate.

When Congress first enacted the Freedom of Information Act in 1966 it was to assure our citizenry that as a democratic government we should and will operate in the open. The express purpose then, and one that continues to hold today, is that facilitating an informed public is our best safeguard against ill-conceived government policies.

Statutory guidance of the Government's disclosure policy is not a simple procedure though. A balance must be maintained between allowing public access to Government information and yet protecting the release of documents which may jeopardize lives of witnesses or informants, privacy of individuals, national security, or confidentiality of valid business concerns.

Opening government's doors to the public has not come without a price. As the volume of FOIA requests has increased, so has the cost and the time involved in filling the requests. This bill authorizes the Office of Management and Budget to establish a uniform fee schedule setting a reasonable charge for commercial requests and exempts requesters representing the media or a public interest from such charge.

We have come a long way in forming a bill that is acceptable to varying interests. I believe this compromise is a sensible response to requests for legislative change to provide an effective yet responsible policy of Government access.

S. 151. A bill to amend title 10, United States Code, to prohibit persons from furnishing care as clinical psychologists to members and former members of the uniformed services and their dependents unless such persons meet certain professional qualifications; to the Committee on Armed Services.

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, I am introducing legislation today which would require that those persons who serve in our Department of Defense health case programs as psychologists be required to be licensed by a State licensing authority within a reasonable period of time upon their entry into the service. My proposal is very similar to that adopted for psychologists serving with the Veterans' Administration as set forth in Public Law 96-151, and I have been informed is the current Department of Defense policy.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 151

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled. That (a) chapter 49 of title 10, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"§ 979. Professional practice by unqualified clinical psychologists

"(a) Except as provided in subsection (b), a person may not furnish care as a clinical psychologist under the Surgeon General of any of the armed forces unless the person has received a doctoral degree in psychology with a specialty in clinical or counseling psychology or the equivalent from a college or university pursuant to a program of education and training approved by such Surgeon General for the purposes of this section, has completed an internship in psychology approved by such Surgeon General for the purposes of this section, and is licensed or certified to provide care as a psychologist in a State.

"(b) A person who satisfies the requirements of subsection (a), other than the requirements to be licensed or certified in a State, may furnish care as a clinical psychologist under the Surgeon General of any of the armed forces for not more than 2 years if such person furnishes such care under the direct supervision of a person who satisfies all the requirements of subsection (a) and who furnishes care as a clinical psychologist under such Surgeon General.".

"979. Professional practice by unqualified clinical psychologists.".

SEC. 2. The amendment made by subsection (a) of the first section shall not apply to any person who, before January 1, 1986, furnished care as a clinical psychologist under the Surgeon General of any of the Armed Forces of the United States.

S. 152. A bill to authorize the sale of certain fish in the State of Hawaii; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

HAWAIIAN FISHING

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, today I am reintroducing legislation to help canners in the State of Hawaii obtain a sufficient volume of competitively priced tuna to run a viable business.

Under existing Federal law, the Nicholson Act (46 U.S.C. 251) prohibits foreign-flag vessels from landing fish in the United States if these fish are caught by foreign-flag vessels on the high seas. The only exception is for fish landed in the United States pursuant to a treaty or convention to which the United States is a party. Unfortunately, such a treaty is not in effect with the relevant Asian countries, and the Hawaiian Tuna Packers cannot supplement its American-caught tuna with foreign-caught tuna to provide an adequate supply of raw fish for its cannery.

The Hawaiian cannery presently employs 420 people, with a payroll of over $5 million a year. In addition, it purchases approximately $2 million worth of fish from Hawaiian fishermen and is the only major market for the catch not sold at the daily fresh fish auction. The economic contribution of the cannery is even greater when one considers the taxes paid and materials purchased in Hawaii.

The bill I am introducing would help provide an adequate supply of tuna by allowing Asian fishing vessels to land their catch in Hawaii. Asian fishing vessels catch about 536,000 short tons of tuna in the Pacific Ocean each year. Two Japanese fleets, gillnetters and sashimi longliners, operate near Hawaii and could provide about 15,500 tons of albacore annually. This fish would supplement, not compete with, the tuna supplied by American fishermen working out of Hawaii. The sashimi longliners would be pleased to sell their albacore, which is less desirable in Japan than other species of tuna, in Hawaii rather than ship it all the way back to their home ports. The State of Hawaii would, of course, be pleased by the economic benefits that would accrue to the State's population by having a viable cannery in Honolulu.

Mr. President, I trust that the Senate will take favorable action on this legislation and I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 153. A bill to amend the Central, Western, and South Pacific Fisheries Development Act, to extend the appropriations authorization through fiscal year 1988; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

REAUTHORIZATION OF THE FISHERIES DEVELOPMENT ACT

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, today, I am introducing legislation to reauthorize the Central, Western, and South Pacific Fisheries Development Act (Public Law 92-44, as amended by Public Law 94-343, Public Law 95-295 and Public Law 97-453). The existing law authorizes $5 million for fiscal years 1983 through 1985. My bill would extend that authorization for another 3 years at existing funding levels. It will help us develop the tuna resources in the Pacific basin and strengthen the American tuna industry.

The program established under the act is designed to assist the economic growth of the Pacific islands by developing their local fisheries. The Pacific Fisheries Development Foundation [PFDF], formerly the Pacific Tuna Development Foundation, was established in 1974 to assist in implementing this program. The PFDF is a unique cooperative effort that includes the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, Guam, American Samoa, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands, the State of Hawaii, the U.S. tuna industry, and the Federal Government.

The PFDF's efforts to develop the Pacific's fisheries have been very successful. There can be little doubt that continued efforts by the PFDF will result in expanded fishing and resource development activities in the region. With continued support, PFDF will work to increase yields, develop conservation techniques, and provide economic benefits to both our Nation and those Pacific islands with which we are closely associated.

As of yet, no moneys have been appropriated under this act. Rather, the U.S. Department of Commerce has chosen to fund the PFDF's work through Saltonstall-Kennedy [S-K] funds. As we are all aware, the administration's budget requests in the past few years have proposed eliminating funding for the S-K program. Through the efforts of Congress, continued funding has been secured for S-K, but the program's long-term viability has been threatened. Under these circumstances, I feel that funding for the PFDF, which has played a crucial role in developing U.S. fisheries in the Pacific, should be put on a permanent basis instead of being dependent on temporary S-K funding.

I urge all my colleagues to join with me in supporting this legislation to reauthorize the Central, Western, and South Pacific Fisheries Development Act through fiscal year 1988.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

S. 154. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, to provide a mechanism for taxpayers to designate $1 of any overpayment of income tax, and to contribute other amounts, for use by the U.S. Olympic Committee; to the Committee on Finance.

UNITED STATES OLYMPIC DEVELOPMENT FUND ACT OF 1985

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, today, Senator STEVENS and I are reintroducing the U.S. Olympic Development Fund Act of 1985. This bill would amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to establish an Olympic trust fund within the Treasury of the United States. Taxpayers could allocate $1 of their personal income tax refunds to that account or they could include cash contributions with their returns to be given to the U.S. Olympic trust fund. The Treasury would periodically turn over the funds to the U.S. Olympic Committee, which would use the money to carry out programs for the expansion and improvement of amateur athletics in the United States so that all Americans, including women, minorities, the aged and the handicapped, are able to participate in athletic endeavors.

Mr. President, in the 98th Congress, support for the Olympic Development Fund Act was considerable. The Senate bill which I sponsored with Senator STEVENS, S. 591, had 60 cosponsors while the House bill, H.R. 1984, had 273 cosponsors. Moreover, the Olympic Development Fund Act was incorporated by the Finance Committee into the final version of the Tax Reform Act, which passed the Senate overwhelmingly. Unfortunately, the Olympic development fund fell out of the tax bill in conference and thus did not achieve final passage. This year, however, I feel that with the groundwork that we laid last year, the value of this worthy cause will be fully recognized and the Congress will act favorably on the Olympic Development Fund Act.

The need for this legislation is clear. As Robert J. Kane, past president of the U.S. Olympic Committee pointed out to the Subcommittee on Taxation and Debt Management:

> The Olympics are the most visible peaceful involvement of the United States with other nations. Our pride and prestige and our youth are on view for billions of people of differing ethnic and political persuasion and, as well, of our friends to see and appraise. It is a wholesome and healthful involvement. Our American athletes are the very best anywhere, when they are given a proper chance. The facts prove this. But fewer than half of our sports are on the high school and college programs, and there is really no other good way in this country to help amateur sports other than on the educational programs.

Of the 26 Olympic sports of the winter and summer games, only 12 are on high school and college programs. So unless our young people have financial resources to pay their way, they are not able to take part in the other 14 sports. And only recently have our women been given a proper chance, even on our educational programs.

So, there are about 14 pauper sports in this country, the great capitalist nation of the world; whereas, in the Soviet Union, East Germany, and virtually every other large country in the world, all sports are richly supported, and is each case by their governments.

Not surprisingly, then, we do very well in the sports that are on our high school and college programs, and really not very well in the others. In making this point, I would like to refer on a factual basis to what happened the last time both superpowers took part in the summer games and at the same time to explode the myth that the recent emergence of the Soviet bloc countries had undermined our part in victories in the Olympic games.

In 1976, at Montreal, Russia got the most gold medals, 57; East Germany, 40; and the United States, third, with 34. Now the Russians won 10 medals in Greco-Roman wrestling. We won none. Greco-Roman wrestling is not a high school or college sport. the Russians won five gold medals in weightlifting, and we don't have that on our college programs. They won five gold medals in canoeing; we won none. The East German women won 11 of 13 swimming events; we won none. The United States won 8 gold medals in track and field; overwhelmingly in men's swimming, 12 gold; first in men's basketball, but men's basketball is only one gold medal.

The East Germans, of their 40 medals, the women won 25 of those 40. The Russian women won 12 golds; our U.S. women won 2. I think that demonstrates that what has happened in the world from 1952 and thereafter is that the Russians figured where we were vulnerable and made sure that the sports that we were vulnerable in, they beefed up.

Mr. President, we all know what great pride and joy was given to this Nation by its Olympic athletes last year in Sarajevo and Los Angeles. We cannot, however, rest on the laurels of these victories, especially considering the depleted field we were competing with. Rather, we need to expand our Olympic training efforts, and this requires money.

Of the more than 140 Olympic teams around the world, ours is the only one which does not receive governmental assistance. If the United States is to remain competitive, and if it is to provide the caliber of team we expect, then we must find a way to provide our Olympic athletes with a dependable means of financial support. Instead of providing direct monetary assistance, it is our judgment that the proud tradition of amateur athletics that we have in this country is best served by providing the American public with the opportunity to support the effort themselves through a checkoff mechanism of their income tax returns. As the only federally chartered organization which has direct responsibilities on behalf of the Federal Government and yet receives no Federal funding, the USOC deserves this opportunity.

What reservations there are with the Olympic Development Fund Act usually arise from the floodgate argument. This argument raised by the IRS, contends that if the USOC is given consideration on the tax form, other worthy charities will have to be given the same treatment. The question, therefore, comes down to the following: Is the U.S. Olympic effort important enough and unique enough to merit establishing a donation mechanism on Federal tax returns? The sponsors of this bill believe it is, and we hope that our colleagues will agree with us.

Our Olympic athletes provide us with great national pride and serve as goodwill ambassadors around the globe. Their peaceful competition with people of other nations furthers America's foreign relations, increasing global interaction, and promoting international understanding and communication. I urge my colleagues to support the Olympic Development Fund Act to provide this Nation's amateur athletes with a consistent and reliable source of funding.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 155. A bill to amend title XVIII of the Social Security Act, to authorize payment to be made for psychologist services provided by, or under arrangements made by, a hospice program; to the Committee on Finance.

HOSPICE CARE PROGRAM

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation which would amend the Hospice Program under our Nation's Medicare law in order to expressly provide that the services of professional psychologists will be made available to individuals who reside in a hospice.

It is my understanding that in the closing hours of the 98th Congress, the Senate Finance Committee received testimony on this proposal and, at that time, it was pointed out that primarily due to the lack of express enumeration of psychological services, hospices all too frequently do not utilize their care.

In my judgment, it is especially important that quality mental health services be made readily available for those individuals who decide it is necessary to enter a hospice program. At that point in time, the therapeutic goal is to ensure that these individuals are able to finish out the final days of their lives in the most humane fashion possible. I cannot help but think that it is especially during these final hours that the services of qualified mental health specialists would be most in need.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

"(I) psychologist services (as defined in subsection (ee))".

(b) Section 1861 of such Act is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(ee)(1) The term 'psychologist services' means services performed by an individual who is a psychologist (as defined in paragraph (2)) that such individual is legally authorized to perform under the law (or the regulatory mechanism provided by law) of the State in which such services are performed, whether or not such individual is under the supervision of, or associated with, a physician or other health care provider.

"(2) The term 'psychologist' means an individual who (A) is licensed or certified at the independent practice level of psychology by the State in which such individual so practices, (B) possesses a doctorate degree in psychology from a regionally accredited educational institution, or in the case of an individual licensed or certified prior to January 1, 1978, possesses a master's degree in psychology and is listed in a national register of mental health service providers in psychology which the Secretary deems appropriate, and (C) possesses two years of supervised experience in health service, at least one year of which is postdegree.".

S. 156. A bill to amend title XVIII of the Social Security Act, to require that Medicare providers also participate in the Civilian Health and Medical Program of the uniformed services [CHAMPUS]; to the committee of Finance.

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation which would provide that those practitioners who formally participate in our Medicare Program would also be required to actively participate in the Department of Defense Civilian Health and Medical Program of the Uniformed Services [CHAMPUS].

Mr. President, my primary intention in introducing this legislation is to bring to the attention of my colleagues the necessity of beginning to address the problem of escalating health care costs in a comprehensive fashion. The CHAMPUS Program is vitally important to the dependents of active duty military personnel. In my judgment, it is very well administered. However in reality, it is really but a very small health care program and simply stated it does not have the economic "clout" of our Medicare and Medicaid Programs in negotiating with providers.

Mr. President, we must encourage the health authorities within both the Department of Defense and the Department of Health and Human Services to work collaboratively. To do so, however, we must also provide them with the necessary administrative flexibility to develop reasonable programs. It is my understanding that the Departments of Defense and Health and Human Services are formally studying this proposal as required by the 1985 Department of Defense Reauthorization Act.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of this bill be printed in the RECORD.

S. 157. A bill to amend the Native American Programs Act of 1974, to authorize the provision of financial assistance to agencies serving Native American Pacific Islanders (including American Samoan natives); to the Select Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation to amend the Native American Programs Act of 1974 to authorize the provision of financial assistance to agencies serving Native American Pacific Islanders, including American Samoans.

American Samoans are like any other native American peoples: They have unique problems in the areas of health, education, employment, and other social areas. For example, according to the U.S. Census Bureau, the percentage of American Samoans living in poverty in the United States is 27.5 percent, compared to 9.6 percent of the total U.S. population. The incidence of extreme poverty for Samoans is 140 percent higher than for the country as a whole.

In California, 21 percent of Samoan families are below the poverty level, compared with 8.7 percent of all California families. In my home State of Hawaii, 37.5 percent of Samoan families are below the poverty level, compared with 7.8 percent of all families.

The unemployment of Samoans in the United States is much higher than the general population. The 1980 census indicates that 9.7 percent of all Samoans in the labor force are unemployed. In California, 10.1 percent of all Samoans in the labor force are unemployed, a rate of 150 percent of the overall State unemployment rate of 6.5 percent. In Hawaii, the unemployment rate of Samoans is 10.2 percent, more than double the rate of the State as a whole.

In Public Law 97-300, the Job Training Partnership Act, the U.S. Congress expressed concern about the unique and special problems facing the American Samoans in the United States. It is now time to fulfill our Federal responsibility to these needy people. Including American Samoans in the Native American Programs Act will upgrade the standard way of living for these people, and it will provide necessary financial resources for us to address the problems the Samoan people are facing. These native American peoples represent a true Federal responsibility.

grams Act of 1974 is amended by inserting ", Native American Pacific Islanders (including American Samoan Natives)," after "Hawaiian Natives".

(2) Section 803 of such act is amended by inserting "Native American Pacific Islanders (including American Samoan Natives)," after "Hawaiian Natives,".

(b) The amendments made by subsection (a) shall apply to fiscal years beginning after September 30, 1984.

By Mr. QUAYLE (for himself and Mr. BOSCHWITZ):

S. 171. A bill to provide additional market credit options for developing nations with expanding economies and to expand markets for United States agricultural commodities abroad, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry.

AGRICULTURAL TRADE ENHANCEMENT ACT OF 1985

Mr. QUAYLE. Mr. President, as must be clear to every Member of the Senate, the farm community has not recovered from the recession of the past several years. While other sectors have revived, a significant number of farmers remain in severe financial distress and these farmers are found across the country in most States and in many counties. It is important for the 99th Congress to take early action to remedy this situation, to find market-related ways to raise farm income and lessen the economic crisis that confronts so many.

Today I am introducing legislation along with Senator BOSCHWITZ that would help do this—improve farm income—by requiring the Government to take action to reduce trade barriers to sales of America's agricultural exports and by providing additional credit opportunities to middle-tier developing countries to buy these products, which, conversely means more opportunities for American farmers to sell their crops overseas.

The United States is the world's leading exporter of agricultural products. A closer look at consumption figures shows how important our foreign customers are and many of us are just beginning to fully understand the implications of this relationship. On average, during the last 5 years, other nations purchased 35 percent of our total grain production, 50 percent of our cotton and over 40 percent of our soybeans. In other words, Americans have exported the production from an average of 100 million acres of grains, soybeans and cotton per year over the past 5 years. This past year alone the U.S. shipped to foreign destinations 59 percent of its wheat, or 1.4 million bushels out of 2.4 million harvested, 45 percent of the corn crop, or 1.9 million bushels out of 4.2 million grown, and, 45 percent of the soybeans, or 740 million bushels out of 1.6 million produced. In fact, production from two out of every five acres is now sold in international trade for a value of $38.0 billion in 1984. This $38.0 billion contributed 25 percent to gross farm income of $159 billion last year, not an insignificant amount.

Foreign sales of this magnitude translate into additional income for every farmer and every State across the land. Take Indiana as an example. It is the ninth largest agricultural State in terms of value of product sold although it ranks just 19th in the amount of acreage in production. In 1982, according to Purdue University statistics, Indiana's farmers sold $4.2 billion worth of crops and livestock. It is estimated that one-third of these sales were made in overseas markets at a value of over one and a half billion dollars ($1.559 billion). Foreign sales of Indiana soybeans came to $640 million, feed grains, primarily corn, $582 million, and wheat and flour $184 million. Indiana's farm economy is very dependent on these sales, as is true of the farm economies in many other States. If these sales drop off or do not expand sufficiently, there will be severe repercussions including buildup of supply, the need to cut back acreage and a decrease in farm income.

From the late 1960's through 1981, a 13-year period, the volume of U.S. agricultural exports increased rapidly year in and year out. Some thought this pattern would continue indefinitely and took it for granted. But, over the next 2 years, the trend suddenly reversed itself and exports dropped from a high of $43.8 billion in 1981 to $34.8 billion at the end of 1983, a loss in value of 25 percent. Though sales rebounded this past year to $380 billion, volume was still off and of more concern is USDA's latest prediction for 1985 that indicates another downturn for exports in the coming year of as much as $2.0 billion.

What has caused this sudden slackening of demand for U.S. agricultural exports? It is necessary to understand some of the economic and other forces at work in order to know what actions can and should be taken to improve the situation. Some say the beginning of the United States' troubles with exports can be traced to the 1980 Russian grain embargo which backed up supplies, caused prices to plummet and set in motion the over zealous support for an inflexible 1981 farm program that had high loan levels and escalated target prices. These inflexible levels, which were insulated from the ebbs and tides of a wildly varying marketplace, later came to adversely affect the competitive position of American products on international markets. The embargo also cast the United States as an unreliable supplier allowing other surplus producing countries to move into the vacuum. Buyer countries, at the same time, learned a lesson, that it is better not to depend primarily on a single supplier but rather to look to many sources for products.

While the embargo set all of this into motion other factors came into play. The world became gripped with a pervasive, all-encompassing recession that reached into every country. This setback to world trade was compounded by a sharp rise in debt, especially among middle-tier and lower income countries, and import purchases were curtailed. With over $800 billion of loans outstanding in the developing nations, an increasingly large proportion of these countries incomes went to service debt. As credit dried up, demand for U.S. agricultural exports declined noticeably. Even major customers such as Mexico, Eastern Europe, and Brazil cut back and U.S. export volume, after 4 years of decline, is today 15-percent below 1980.

Meanwhile, the domestic economy was faced with soaring deficits and persistent high interest rates. High interest rates attracted foreign investors looking for safe and high returns. In this situation the value of the dollar increased steadily which meant our agricultural exports were becoming more and more expensive in terms of foreign currencies and therefore less competitive. In relation to the German mark, for instance, the U.S. dollar has increased in value by about 50 percent. Such an effective price increase can only lead to reduced demand.

To further exacerbate the problems of U.S. exports, the downturn in world demand was accompanied by increasingly aggressive trading policies by other nations. The European Community (EC) increased use of subsidies to assure sales of surplus, but noncompetitive products on world markets. And, Japan, although carrying an exhorbitant 1984 trade surplus of $35 billion with the United States, has maintained trade barriers that keep out this country's highly competitive agricultural products. These unjustified and unwarranted practices have shut out competitive food products in an attempt to protect relatively inefficient domestic farmers. For instance, the EC could not sell 1 bushel of wheat flour into Egypt without subsidies and if Japan lowered some of its barriers, U.S. cattlemen could put a pound of beef in Kyoto's supermarkets at one-third the present price. It is obvious these and other countries are selling products below cost of production or are keeping products out that have been produced at lower cost.

At the same time, it is clear that U.S. farm programs have also contributed to the recent difficulties on world markets, the inability to retain or expand export sales. When the 1985 farm bill is before Congress, its provisions must be evaluated as to their impact on U.S. farmers opportunities to sell their abundant production beyond the borders of our own 50 States. Most agricultural experts agree that the rigid income and price supports written into the 1981 farm bill, plus the related production controls, overall seemed to heighten the problems for U.S. agricultural trade rather than to diminish them: First, support prices have provided a floor for our major competitors to use to their advantage; second, our steadily increasing target prices have provided an economic incentive for our competitors to expand their own production; and, third, our continued reliance on production controls has sent a strong signal to other surplus producing nations that the U.S. is willing to unilaterally make the supply adjustment for the rest of the world.

It seems to me that we have been working against ourselves, indeed we are continuing to cut into one of the few remaining strong sectors on the U.S.'s dismal trade balance sheets. And, with the overall trade deficit reaching a record $125 billion in 1984, it would seem clear that Congress and the farm community should work together to assure that the $19 billion net contribution that agriculture makes is not jeopardized.

But there is real cause for concern about the health of our last remaining major positive trade sector. As mentioned, the volume of agricultural exports has declined for the past 4 years and though it is expected to increase slightly in 1985 the value is projected to be off by $2 billion. Compounding this unhappy outlook, is the indication that imports will increase reducing the net agricultural trade balance by about $2 billion as well. Most observers agree that it is essential to maintain our position in world markets if farm income is to improve, the disastrous trade balance is to be redressed and if the economy as a whole is to return to a healthier equilibrium.

There is much that Congress can do if it will make the effort to forestall excessive spending, if it will create a more market-oriented and flexible farm program and if it will develop firm but reasonable responses to the unfair trading practices of other nations.

As Secretary Block has said, the best program for our farmers would be to reduce the Federal budget deficit. This one single action would help bring down interest rates and lower the value of the dollar, easing debt problems on the farm and increasing sales opportunities overseas. Congress is clearly aware of the need to reduce the deficit and the next 5 or 6 months will test our mettle. I know the farm community will be watching votes far beyond those just directed at agricultural policy.

Congress also can formulate a more market-oriented farm bill in 1985 by providing flexibility to adjust to market forces so that U.S. products can find their rightful share of world markets and farmers can earn new income from real market sales not Government price support programs. For the past 3 years we have been struggling with a legislative heritage that was designed for an economic situation that never materialized, that is, high and higher interest rates, great and greater costs. We simply must move toward a more market-sensitive system with loan rates and target prices reflecting supply/demand changes. And, if this cannot be accomplished overnight, there can be a transition period where this country's farm support programs are changed to ones based on an average of several years' prices or where the Secretary of Agriculture has discretionary authority to set prices within a range prescribed by Congress. However it is done, it is imperative that the formula allow for a response to changing market conditions and not be subject to the whims of political or other forces. This is critical if U.S. products are to maintain their comparative advantage on world markets.

Furthermore, there are factors beyond anyone's control such as weather or other natural disasters. In agriculture, this inevitable variability must be prepared for and dealt with within a flexible framework that can respond to the conditions whatever they might be.

Of more immediate interest, Congress also can make some specific changes in law that will contribute to the effectiveness of this Nation's agricultural trading efforts. There is a growing consensus that the United States needs a firmer agricultural trade policy. That is why I am introducing the "Agricultural Trade Enhancement Act of 1985" which will offer alternative and forceful approaches to the rising tide of unfair trade practices that are confronting our farmers.

The first section of this measure calls for the establishment of an interdepartmental committee to identify and compile a report on any major trade barriers to U.S. agricultural exports. Agriculture Secretary Block and U.S. Trade Representative Brock would be designated to cochair this group. I believe both of them see this as a necessary first step to identify the problems that face us. This working group will not reinvent the wheel, but will draw upon the available knowledge from Government departments and agencies, the information gathered by such commissions as the one recently set up to study export trade, and compile data from private sources. The report also will identify the best means, under current agreements and rules, of reducing or eliminating the blockages. The groups work is to be completed within 6 months of passage of this act. The bill then would require the Secretary of Agriculture to take all action possible to end these blockages and if success is not achieved require him to take all steps allowed under U.S. law and other trade agreements to end the situation. This could include full application of duties and fees, rules and regulations and available credit opportunities.

A third section of the proposal would provide for more options in the array of U.S. credit programs to enable developing countries, at least those with higher per capita incomes such as Turkey, El Salvador, Morocco, and Brazil, to continue to purchase American food products but under different credit conditions. Some countries have graduated from the need for direct donations and 40-year concessional sales, others cannot quite meet the requirements of full commercial sales. The bill would grant new authority for intermediate-term credit guarantees that would have a 3 to 10 year payback schedule but at close to market interest rates. Other Government guarantee programs have a 3-year or less payback schedule.

Additionally, USDA would be required to fund this new intermediate-term credit guarantee authority, along with and existing, but previously unfunded (for the most part) authority for intermediate-term direct credits, at $500 million a year for each of the next 4 years, 1985 through 1988. The Commodity Credit Corporation, which would oversee the program, would decide how much would be channeled to direct credits or credit guarantees in any 1 year.

A final section of this legislation would continue to add to the body of law that protects America's farmers from any future selective embargoes against farm products to make sure that this sector alone never again has to shoulder the entire brunt of U.S. foreign policy, national security or domestic political initiatives.

I urge my colleagues to review the ideas set forth in this bill and then provide the support needed to move the legislation through Congress at the earliest appropriate time. I ask unanimous consent that a more detailed description of the bill and the text be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill and analysis were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follow:

PROVISIONS OF THE AGRICULTURAL TRADE ENHANCEMENT ACT OF 1985"

The "Agricultural Trade Enhancement Act of 1985" would provide new intermediate-term credit options for those developing nations whose economies have reached higher output levels while offering American farmers new opportunities for overseas sales.

First, the proposal would grant authority to the President to appoint an interdepartmental committee made up of representatives of those branches of the government involved in international agricultural trade. The exact number and composition of the committee would be left to Presidential discretion, however, the Departments of Agriculture, State and Commerce can be expected to be included as well as the U.S. Trade Representative's office. The group would be chaired jointly by the Secretary of Agriculture and the U.S. Trade Representative.

This interdepartmental committee would be charged with two tasks: First, it shall catalogue, on a commodity by commodity basis, all the major unfair trade practices that adversely affect U.S. farm exports. Information on these activities will be solicited from other government agencies as well as outside groups, including farm organizations. Second, the committee would be required to describe the most effective means of reducing or eliminating these practices through all available channels. Further, the committee would be required to report back to the President within six months and then would be terminated at the President's discretion upon completion of its duties.

The next section of the bill would provide that, upon receipt of the report, the President shall "utilize any remedies available under any international agreement" to remove barriers to farm exports. A time frame would be suggested for resolving problems that had been identified as major trade blockages. Remedies could include such things as fuller application of allowable duties and fees, promulgation of additional rules and regulations, as well as more creative use of credit options such as the blended credit program and the new intermediate-term credits that would be provided by this bill.

The third part would add to the array of the U.S. Department of Agriculture's credit programs for developing nations to purchase farm products. It would amend Section 4 of the "Food for Peace Act of 1966" to make available an intermediate-term guaranteed credit option to those developing countries which no longer are dependent on direct donations or concessional food sales but still are not able to meet the full terms of regular commercial loans. Unlike the blended credit program, which gives relief on interest and has a payback term of less than three years, the new initiative would provide for close-to-market interest rates but a repayment time of three to ten years. This section also would require USDA to fund existing Commodity Credit Corporation (CCC) authority for intermediate-term direct credit, as well as the new authority for the mid-term credit guarantees, at not less than $500 million for each of the four years 1985 through 1988. The CCC would have the leeway to decide the percentage of funds directed to direct credit or credit guarantees. Previously enacted sections of law provide that intermediate credit will not interfere with regular commercial credit.

The final section of the proposal would address the concern of many that the government still has the power to single out farm products for a selective embargo. The additional provision, which would add to language adopted in 1981 and 1982 regarding contract sanctity, would prohibit, under any circumstance other than war, imposition of any embargo on agricultural products for more than 60 days unless Congress approved an extension of such an order. This provision would also cover the previously omitted non-contracted agricultural export sales that might be entered into after an embargo was imposed.

If enacted, this measure will provide the U.S. Government additional tools to expand agricultural exports, would encourage those developing nations that are experiencing substantial economic growth to use a variety of credit options and would open opportunities for additional sales of American farm products.

By Mr. SPECTER:

S. 172. A bill entitled the "Professional Football Stabilization Act of 1985"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PROFESSIONAL FOOTBALL STABILIZATION ACT OF 1985

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, today I introduce a bill designed to balance professional football fans' interest in their teams with professional football owners' property interests in their teams. This legislation is premised on the judgment that sports fans in a city have a form of proprietary interest in their teams which should preclude the owners from moving the franchise unless it is a failing business. In my judgment, a sports team is affected with public interest.

Professional football has enjoyed huge success because of the privileged position accorded to it by the action of Congress in granting an antitrust exemption, to revenue sharing on TV receipts. That exemption together with other strong public policy factors, warrants this legislation which would restrict an owner's opportunity to treat a football franchise like any other piece of private property.

The bill is designed to do two things. First, it is intended to provide a cause of action to cities to prevent professional football teams from abandoning them for more profitable locations. Teams should not move, in my judgment, at an owner's whim or simply to increase enormous profits to the astronomical. This bill begins the process of staking a course to provide legislative guidance for standards that will protect fans, local investment, and civic pride.

In addition, the bill provides limited antitrust immunity to joint action of those teams engaged in professional football that serves to protect such community interests on the basis of fair, objective standards. At base, I am seeking to ensure stability of home teams so long as they receive the support of their local fans and are not suffering losses or other conditions that threaten their continued financial viability.

In recent weeks, attention has been focused on the potential relocation of the Philadelphia Eagles. This legislation would certainly address any such move. It is modeled closely after S. 2821 which I introduced in the 97th Congress in response to the move of the Oakland Raiders to Los Angeles. As I stated at that time, I believe a sports team is different from a regular business entity. If an ordinary business moves away, another such business will take its place if a reasonable profit can be made. That is customarily not so with a sports team.

It is my sense that two generations of sports fans still resent the movement of the Brooklyn Dodgers' and the New York Giants' franchises. In the last 3 years the people of Oakland and Baltimore have suffered the loss of teams which they had enthusiastically supported. Conversely, people understood the necessity for the relocation of the St. Louis Browns and the Philadelphia and later Kansas City Athletics.

An excellent analysis of the unfairness of sports franchise moves, the unfair pressure on cities, a discussion of certain legal issues and Philadelphia's problems with the Eagles was eloquently articulated by Mr. Howard Cosell in his "Sportsbeat" program on ABC-TV on December 16, 1984. Since that program was and is so instructive on this issue I ask unanimous consent that the transcript of that program be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the transcript was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TRANSCRIPT

For: ABC-TV Sports.
Program: Sportsbeat.
Date: December 15, 1984.

ANNOUNCER. This is ABC Sportsbeat. The City of Philadelphia is in shock as the Eagles appear headed for Phoenix. Another chapter in the history of franchise football. What's the real story? Is it an unstoppable time? Is federal legislation the answer? Philadelphia Mayor Wilson Goode and Senator Arlen Specter speak out today on ABC Sportsbeat.

HOWARD COSELL. The big news this week: the Philadelphia Eagles of the National Football League may be headed for Phoenix, Arizona. One of the NFL's most historic franchises, the Eagles received support through thick and thin. And the team was not, repeat not, losing money. However, owner Leonard Tose reported to have a personal indebtedness in the neighborhood of $40 million. Tose is reported to have found buyers in Phoenix.

An anguished Philadelphia Mayor, W. Wilson Goode, has been trying desperately to get local financing to match the Phoenix offer. Pennsylvania's United States Senator, Arlen Specter, angrily promised to push for legislation to prevent yet another team from deserting yet another city.

And late yesterday, in a surprise action, the National Football League filed suit in U.S. District Court in Philadelphia, seeking to have the court enforce the Eagles' long term contract to continue to operate in Philadelphia as it has for the past fifty-one years. Mayor Goode and Senator Specter are in the studios of ABC affiliate, WPVI, in Philadelphia. We'll be talking at length with them later in this program.

I personally spoke at length with NFL Commissioner, Pete Rozelle, yesterday. Invited him to join Mayor Goode and Senator Specter here today. He declined—understandably—saying that he would very much like to, but on advice of counsel, his own common sense, and his clear obligation to the owners of his league, he could not conscionably do so until he has met with all of those owners on Tuesday coming up.

But first, this reported move by the Eagles, only the latest chapter in a continuing saga of carpetbagging sports franchises. Holding cities hostage for greater personal gain, either by threat of removal or actual removal. It's a subject that Sportsbeat has documented thoroughly over the past three years. And to fully understand its implications, it is imperative that we, once again, explore the very beginnings of this sports phenomenon.

The genesis of our story is baseball, rather than football. Long before pro football grew in size and stature, baseball had a stranglehold on the psyche of America. So much so, that in 1922, the Supreme Court granted professional baseball exemption from the Sherman Anti-Trust Law. In those days, baseball was considered preeminently a sport, rather than a business. A rude awakening in 1957, when the Brooklyn Dodgers, long the most successful National League franchise, deserted Brooklyn for the more lucrative environs of Chavez Ravine in Los Angeles. And land, lots of land. 295 acres and attendant oil rights for owner, Walter O'Malley. This was a land grab, pure and simple. The great baseball exodus had begun.

There was no recourse for the injured cities. The sport was protected by its anti-trust exemption. In addition to the Dodgers, the New York Giants to San Francisco; the Washington Senators to Minnesota; the Milwaukee Braves to Atlanta; the Kansas City Athletics to Oakland; the Seattle Pilots to Milwaukee. When the Washington Senators became the Texas Rangers in '71, baseball's Chinese checkered game ended.

But pro football, which had become a real power following the merger of the AFL and NFL in '66, picked up where baseball had left off. The football Giants of New York were lured away, not by land, but primarily by the promise of luxury boxes like these in Texas Stadium. They left for a $68 million stadium and a new tax jurisdiction. The New Jersey Meadowlands, where their luxury loges bring in over a million dollars in revenue each year. And though the loges are publicly financed, all the money goes to the Giants owners, not even dividable with the visiting team.

Then, a brilliant businessman, the late Darryl Rosenblum, realized he could combine the two, getting both land and loges. He moved his L.A. Rams to the neighboring tax jurisdiction of Anaheim. In return, an option to buy and develop ninety-five acres of choice real estate at a preferred rate; a hundred ten plus boxes, worth over two million annually; a bargain rental agreement; lucrative parking facilities; and a concession deal.

Next, owners like Bob Irsay of the Baltimore Colts realized they didn't have to leave to get what they wanted, just threaten to. Irsay took his show on the road; began touring stadiums, like the Gator Bowl in Jacksonville. Area residents gave him a warm reception. But Irsay was more interested in putting the heat on his home City of Baltimore.

BOB IRSAY. Now I tell the people of Baltimore, like I told them three months ago, get off your duffs and have the official do something, like these people are doing here.

COSELL. If his demands for renovations and luxury boxes were not met by Baltimore, then there might be the Jacksonville Colts, or the Memphis Colts, or even the L.A. Colts. Result: a new Baltimore offer for a long term lease; $23 million in renovations. But Irsay held out for a short term deal, and thus kept his options open.

And, in Minnesota, another example. Vikings owner, Max Winter, tired of watching his football team labor in the snow and cold of Bloomington, launched a campaign for a domed stadium. Once again, ominous headlines set the stage. Named as possible alternative sites, Birmingham, Memphis, New York, Montreal, even Mexico City, Los Angeles and Phoenix, too. The panic was on. It was dome time or doom time. Dome won out over doom. The Vikes moved to beautiful, downtown Minneapolis, and joined the baseball Twins in a $55 million, tax supported Metrodome. A hundred fifteen luxury boxes there, could bring the Vikes another $3 million each year.

Then, after that, came the Buffalo caper. First, Bills' owner Ralph Wilson, got the city to enlarge War Memorial Stadium on threat of departure. He then pressed for a new and a bigger stadium, issued this ultimatum.

RALPH WILSON. If Buffalo doesn't get a new stadium, it will force the move of the Buffalo Bills.

COSELL. County officials got the message, contracted for a multi-purpose, domed arena. No dice, said Wilson. He wanted his own football stadium in suburban Orchard Park. Erie County capitulated. Result: Wilson got his lavish new stadium. The taxpayers' bill: $41 million for Ritz Stadium; $1.5 million for renovating old War Memorial; $90 million in potential damages, resulting from the domed contract the County was forced to break.

But, there are more twists to this story. And we'll have them when we return.

[Commercials.]

COSELL. In 1980, a case that would send shock waves through the NFL. After negotiations with Oakland broke down, Al Davis wanted to take his Raiders to L.A. The NFL said no. Davis sued. Two courts, Federal District Court, Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals, ultimately agreed with Davis. U.S. Supreme Court refused to even hear the case. The NFL was in violation of the anti-trust laws for trying to block his team's move to L.A.

The key issue in the case: Rule 4.3 of the NFL Constitution. That requires three-quarters of the owners to approve an attempt to move a team to another city, more than seventy-five miles away. This is the rule that was found in violation of the existing anti-trust laws of this nation.

Instead of amending its rules to conform with the law, as did the NBA, the NFL adopted an ostrich-like position. Said it was now powerless to prevent franchise removals. Wrong. Wrong. Absolutely wrong. It could change Rule 4.3 to a simple majority vote. It could establish reasonable criteria governing franchise transfers. One example: economic loss over a continuing period of time, say three years. Those two steps would enable the National Football League to conform with, what is known as, the rule of reason in anti-trust law.

Instead, the NFL has persisted in going to the Congress, trying to obtain legislation that would grant it anti-trust exemption. Such an exemption would give the NFL sole power to decide whether a team may move.

MAN. We have a situation where the Raiders are going to play this year, apparently, in Los Angeles. So, we were told to come back when we had a problem. We feel we have a big problem. We hope the Congress will recognize it and clarify it.

COSELL. So far, Congress has rebuffed the League in all its attempts. Taking advantage of the NFL's refusal to amend its rules, two teams promptly deserted their cities. First, the Jets left New York; crossed the Hudson into New Jersey, playing at the Meadowlands. Then, Colts owner, Bob Irsay, made good on his years of threatening Baltimore. He wooed Indianapolis; found Mayor William Hudnut eager to take another city's team.

WILLIAM HUDNUT. If he feels that he's in a distressed situation in Baltimore and he, in fact, wants to move his franchise, I'm not gonna sit on the sidelines of history and watch the river flow by and eat bonbons. I'm gonna get in there and compete.

COSELL. Just one week after Mayor Hudnut made that statement, Irsay sneaked out of Baltimore under cover of night. Slipped away to Indianapolis.

Mayor WILLIAM SCHAEFER. All of the memorabilia of the old Colts are gone. All. All taken out of that building that—and dumped in a van. Just dumped in. You know. Young—his shoes, five-and-a-half, little, tiny, itty-bitty shoes that he had, and he was a great football player. Unitas' jersey. All those things that mean nothing to any other city but us. Wouldn't you think—just the final humiliation to the City. We'll take all of it and we'll dump it, and we'll put it on a van, and we'll take it away at midnight and two o'clock in the morning.

COSELL. Now, the Eagles may be headed to Phoenix. Fifty-one years in Philadelphia. All those memories. Remember, Norman Van Brocklin, the Dutchman, passing to Tommy McDonald, beating the Pack for the 1960 title. Can anyone ever forget big, number 60? Chuck Bednarik, football's last sixty minute man. After that, there were long, lean years. And then, the Eagles would come back, with the likes of that man, Wilbert Montgomery, under the leadership of Dick Vermeil. Beat the Cowboys. Dudley '80 Superbowl, where they did, indeed, lose to the Raiders. The Eagles slipped again in the last few seasons.

But they're part of the fabric of Philadelphia. And Mayor Goode has been trying mightily to keep them there. Tuesday night past, he met with Leonard Tose at the Eagles' owner's home. Came away thinking he had a fifty-fifty chance to save them for the Quaker city. When we come back, we'll talk with Mayor Wilson Goode, who is in our Philadelphia studios, along with Senator Arlen Specter of Pennsylvania.

[Commercials.]

COSELL. At WPVI, Philadelphia, you're looking at Mayor W. Wilson Goode of Philadelphia to the right of your screen. To the left, Arlen Specter, Senator from the City of Philadelphia itself, past District Attorney there. Let's begin immediately with Mayor Goode. Mr. Mayor, at this point in time, exactly where do you stand in your efforts to keep the Eagles in Philadelphia?

Mayor WILSON GOODE. Well last evening, I met with Leonard Tose. And he told me that he wanted very much to keep the team here. We talked about various ways that could be done. And we're agreed to wait until some time today, to see whether or not he would come back with me with other ways to do so. I've been saying all week, we had an even shot to keep them here. Based upon my last negotiation with him, I'm convinced that those odds have increased seven to three in favor of keeping the team here in the City. The next twenty-four, forty-eight hours will tell us more than what we know now.

We've put on the table for him, you should know, a package that basically said that we're willing to match what you have in Phoenix. But we want to make sure that we know who will manage the team. He, in fact, did not accept that. And we're back talking about other alternatives at this time. But he has said to me, in no uncertain terms, I want to keep the team here. We're trying to find a way to do it. We're working with him. We're talking with him. We're talking with his people. And I think that it could be worked out. I don't know.

COSELL. Okay sir. Let's assume negotiations fail, fall through. Their lease runs at Vet Stadium through 1991. Will you undertake injunctive action to keep them there?

GOODE. Our lease runs at the Vet until the year 2001. And we're prepared to go into court, whenever he tells us he intends to leave, and to enforce the terms of that lease. We are going to go in and ask for a temporary restraining order. We feel that under that lease, that we have the right to keep the team here until the year 2001.

COSELL. I understand, sir. Now, do you feel—having seen the history of sports operators carpetbagging franchises earlier in this telecast—do you feel that the City has been undignified, humiliated and, indeed, that you're being blackmailed to keep a sports operator in that City, so that he can pay off his personal debts?

GOODE. Well I feel that the National Football League and the Congressmen have to—someone ought to put into place some kind of rule, some kind of law, where there would, in fact, be a process, which people had to go through before they can do this. I should not have to wake up at 6:30 a.m. in the morning, and have the radio tell me that the football team, which has been here for fifty-one years, intends to leave the City. There ought to be a process by which they go through. I've said all along, that we're willing to help that team, to support that team, to keep them here. If they have fiscal-problems, then talk with us about it. But there was no prior notice to us. And the first notice came via the news media. So I think that we ought to have a rule in place, that will help us to have a process, by which we can compete in this process.

COSELL. Thank you very much, Mr. Mayor. What happened to you is exactly what you heard Mayor William Donald Schaefer of Baltimore say had happened to him. We'll be back in just a moment with Senator Arlen Specter of Pennsylvania.

COSELL. At WPVI in Philadelphia, Senator Arlen Specter of the State of Pennsylvania. You've seen the history piece at the start of the telecast, Senator. Now, right to the point. Is there any reason in the world, as you see it, why the National Football league can't put its own house in order?

Senator ARLEN SPECTER. No. The NFL has the full power, under the federal decisions—federal court decisions in the Raiders case—to establish reasonable rules to stop franchises from being moved, unless teams are in financial distress or have inadequate stadiums, providing the League would have a vote of a simple majority. The League could do that, and right now stop the move of the Eagles to Phoenix or any similar situation in the future, which didn't have some reasonable basis for the move.

COSELL. Senator, let me get then right to the next point. Did you or did you not dispatch a letter to Commissioner Pete Rozelle, suggesting he take exactly that course?

SPECTER. Yes I did, Howard. And I have been working with Commissioner Rozelle, since back in 1982, on this precise problem, when they came to the Judiciary Committee. And we had hearings, and I proposed legislation to deal with the Raiders' case, which provided that no team could move unless they were in financial distress, proved over a reasonable period of time—three years, or had an inadequate stadium.

Because I believe the fans have an interest in franchises, and sports are not businesses like any other kind. And, had that law passed, or had the League followed the suggestion of that law to establish such standards, the League would be in a perfect position now to keep the Eagles in Philadelphia; to have stopped the move of the Colts; and to bring some order into the hectic, chaotic situation which now threatens movement of sports franchises.

COSELL. And isn't one of the basic problems in dealing with this issue, Senator, right on the line, the fact that when the Supreme Court of the United States refused to hear the Raiders' case, every paper in the land, factually, except the "Wall Street Journal", said the NFL was stripped of its power to control franchise transfers, and that was false. Is that not so, sir.

SPECTER. Correct. When you read the cases, Howard, as you and I have, from a legal point of view, anti-trust Constitutional law, it is plain that the National Football League has the power to have reasonable restraints on franchise movements. They can stop a franchise from moving if it doesn't have a good reason to do so. If the Eagles were losing money; if the fans weren't supporting the Eagles; if they had a terrible stadium, the Eagles would have a basis to move. And, if the League were to have a rule which said, you have to persuade a majority of the owners in order to move, that would stand up under the anti-trust laws in the federal court decisions.

COSELL. All right, sir. Then, is it likely that the NFL will ever get legislation that it wants; to wit, anti-trust exemptions; since, as you have stated, they have the power, if they adhere to the current laws of the land, to adjust and to control franchise removals.

SPECTER. Howard, my judgment is that the NFL will not get anti-trust exemption, and they should not, because the ramifications or implications of that are so broad, that no one can predict where it would go. And I believe, based on conversations that I've had with Commissioner Rozelle—and I believe that he's really working to try to solve this problem in a constructive way. Commissioner Rozelle is not looking for anti-trust exemption at the present time. I believe that the NFL ought to put its house in order.

But if it doesn't, there is growing sentiment in the Congress—my colleague Senator Heinz agrees with me. Senator Gorton of Washington has proposed similar legislation, which passed out of the Commerce Committee last week. I talked to Slade earlier this week. There are thirty-one states—I tabulated them day before yesterday—thirty-one states which have sports franchises, which could receive a substantial shock like Baltimore did, and Oakland did, and Philadelphia might, unless some action is taken. Now, thirty-one's a majority. And I think if the problem is not solved by the Leagues, the Congress will act. And, of course, we all know, that at the private interest, the Leagues would be much better off if they acted themselves. Because, if Congress gets into it, it might not be quite so comfortable for everybody.

COSELL. Senator Specter, you have been very clear. I can't thank you enough. Maybe the public will now understand. And to you, Senator, and to you, Mr. Mayor, thank you very much for being with us. And it's been a delight to have you both. It's time for the American people to understand where we're heading with regard to sports franchises.

[Commercials.]

COSELL. Thank you for being with us today. Back next week, four o'clock Eastern and Pacific times, three o'clock Central.

Mr. SPECTER. In the 97th Congress, Mr. President, in a series of hearings before the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, this approach of determining objective standards to establish when a team could relocate was favorably received by many knowledgeable witnesses. Even Al Davis, managing partner of the Raiders and a person intimately involved in the complex litigation that spawned interest in the issue of franchise relocation, favored this approach if limited to prospective application.

Since these hearings, the Federal courts in the Raiders' litigation have agreed that league rules can be established that will comply with the antitrust laws. The district court, for example, found unlawful the NFL rule that required that a team relocation be approved by three-fourths of the league members and stated instead that "A majority vote requirement, on the other hand, would seem to provide a fairer accommodation of league and individual team interests." Los Angeles Memorial Coliseum Commission v. National Football League, 484 F. Supp. 1274, 1277 (C.D. Calif. 1980). The ninth circuit discussed in greater length the NFL's ability to fashion lawful relocation rules finding: "To withstand antitrust scrutiny * * * [a]n expressed recognition and consideration of those objective factors espoused by the NFL as important, such as population, economic projections, facilities, regional balance, etc. would be well advised * * *. Fan loyalty and location continuity could also be considered." Los Angeles Memorial Coliseum Commission v. National Football League, 726 F.2d 1381, 1397 (9th Cir. 1984).

Despite the recitation of appropriate procedures by the district court and the ninth circuit in the Raiders' litigation, the NFL failed to respond to that court decision, and failed to establish any standards governing franchise relocation. Into this standardless void came an announcement, on December 11, 1984, that Leonard Tose, owner of the Philadelphia Eagles, was considering a partial sale of his team, coupled with the removal of that team to Phoenix, AZ. The Eagles' situation represented a perfect example of the NFL's lack of responsibility in regulating franchise moves. Had the National Football League established standards which would have been applicable to the Eagles' proposed relocation, there is no doubt that the Eagles could not have moved from Philadelphia considering the fans' support, profitability of the franchise, and the accommodations of Veterans Stadium which was constructed in 1971.

On December 12, 1984, I spoke to Pete Rozelle, commissioner of the NFL, regarding the Eagles' proposed move. I followed that conversation with a December 13 letter to Mr. Rozelle in which I expressed my concern over the Eagles, and suggested a course of action for the NFL owners to take to remedy the situation. I urged Mr. Rozelle and the NFL owners to adopt a rule which would establish standards, and require a simple majority vote of the owners to allow that move under the application of those standards. I suggested the consideration of factors such as fan support, length of tenure of the team in the city, the condition of the stadium, and the profitability of the team over a reasonable period such as 3 years. I strongly recommended prompt action by the NFL in order that such a rule could be in place before the move of the Eagles from Philadelphia to Phoenix could be fully consummated.

The Eagles' move, at least for the moment, has been averted—but at substantial cost to the city of Philadelphia and its taxpayers. According to media accounts, the estimated cost to Philadelphia taxpayers of the concessions made by the city to retain the Eagles is at least $30 million over the next 20 years. On December 17, I again wrote to Commissioner Rozelle and stated that the National Football League, rather than the city of Philadelphia, should bear the cost of any concessions which have been made to keep the Eagles in Philadelphia because those concessions could not have been extracted under the threat of an Eagles' move if the NFL had fulfilled its duty to establish reasonable standards for such franchise moves.

Commissioner Rozelle wrote to me on December 19 without responding to my previous questions concerning the concessions made by the city of Philadelphia, and my belief that such costs should be borne by the National Football League. One concession, the deferral of the team's annual stadium rental for 10 years, is especially problemsome because it adds more than $10 million to the Eagles' debt over the next 10 years. I expressed my continuing concern over such expenses to Mr. Rozelle in another letter on December 27, stating that aside from the fact that the city should not bear that expense, it is most unwise to structure an additional factor which adds to the Eagles' debt.

The inaction of the NFL, and the resulting unfair costs and burdens placed on the city of Philadelphia, lead to the conclusion that Congress must act to remedy this situation by establishing rules and standards along the lines of the bill I propose today.

Although this bill addresses only the issue of football franchises, it is my thought that the Congress should explore the possibility of extending such legislation to cover all professional sports.

It is imperative that the question of sports franchise relocation be addressed at this moment. The following 31 States have or benefit from sports franchises today which could be threatened at any time by a move such as the one proposed by the Eagles last month: California, Pennsylvania, Georgia, Illinois, Ohio, Kentucky, New York, Texas, Missouri, Maryland, Michigan, Minnesota, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, New Hampshire, Wisconsin, Washington, Kansas, Connecticut, Florida, Indiana, Colorado, Virginia, Louisiana, Nevada, New Jersey, Utah, Arizona, Oregon, West Virginia, and Delaware.

Teams that are supported by both the fans and the finances of those 31 States must be prevented from arbitrary moves solely in the interest of the teams' owners. The legislation that I propose today will serve to conteract the surge of teams abandoning their home cities because guidelines to restrict such moves have not been set.

I also ask unanimous consent that the bill and letters referred to in my statement be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill and letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Professional Football Stabilization Act of 1985."

SEC. 2. (a) The Congress finds that—

(1) professional football teams achieve a strong local identity with the people of the cities and regions in which they are located, providing a source of pride to their supporters;

(2) professional football teams provide a valuable form of entertainment in the cities and regions in which they are located;

(3) substantial tax revenues and employment opportunities derive from the operation of professional football teams to the cities and regions in which they are located;

(4) the public through a municipal stadium authority (which may be a city or county agency, or a municipal corporation) generally authorizes capital construction bonds to build a stadium, while the team's lease or use agreement generally sets rent to cover only operating costs of the stadium, without reimbursing the public for construction costs;

(5) professional football teams are invested with a strong public interest; and

(6) professional football teams utilize materials shipped in interstate commerce, professional football teams travel interstate to compete and professional football games are nationally broadcasted.

(b) The Congress therefore, finds and declares that professional football teams are affected with a strong public interest, that professional football affects interstate commerce, and that it is the national policy to discourage the relocation of professional football teams receiving local support.

SEC. 3. The Act of September 30, 1961 (75 Stat. 732; 15 U.S.C. 1291-1295) is amended—

(1) by redesignating after section 4 as section 7 and striking out all after section 7, as redesignated;

(2) by inserting after section 3 the following:

"SEC. 4. It shall be unlawful for any professional football team which has played its home games in a municipality for six continuous years or more to relocate unless—

"(1) one or more of the other parties to the stadium lease agreement materially breaches a provision of the agreement essential to profitability, and such noncompliance cannot be remedied within a reasonable period of time;

"(2) the stadium in which the team wishing to move presently plays is inadequate for the purposes of profitably operating the team, and the stadium authority demonstrates no intent to remedy such inadequacies; or

"(3) the team has incurred an annual net loss for at least three consecutive years immediately preceding the relocation, or has incurred losses in a shorter period that endanger the continued profitability of the team; and in computing net losses of the team, no personal obligations or losses of the owner may be included in salaries, other compensation or expenses to owners or owners' family members except to the extent they are ordinary, reasonable and necessary compensation and expenses. Provided however: an owner of a professional football team who seeks to relocate shall provide written notification of such intention to the local governmental authority at lease 120 days before relocation. Where an owner intends to sell the team and relocate it, the governmental authority shall decide whether the criteria for relocation have been satisfied and if it finds that they have been, the governmental authority or any person it selects shall have a right of first refusal and may make an offer to purchase and retain the team. If any such retention offer substantially equals the relocation offer, then relocation shall be unlawful.

In the event that the local governmental authority concludes that the owner has not satisfied the provisions of Section 4, a civil action may be commenced pursuant to the provisions of Section 6.

"SEC. 5. The antitrust laws, as defined in section 1 of the Clayton Act, and the Federal Trade Commission Act, shall not apply to any joint agreement by or among persons engaging in or conducting the organized professional sport of football which restricts the movement of any member team in accordance with the criteria provided in section 4.

"SEC. 6. Any government authority in a municipality from which a professional football team relocates or seeks to relocate may bring a civil action to prevent such relocation and for other equitable relief and damages if such relocation does not comply with Section 4, and the federal district court shall have jurisdiction over such action.".

(3) by inserting after "section" 1 in section 7, as redesignated, "and section 5",

(4) by inserting after section 7, as redesignated, the following:

"SEC. 8. For purposes of this Act:

"(1) The term 'persons' means any individual partnership, corporation or unincorporated association or combination or association thereof.

"(2) The term 'relocate' means to change the location in which a team plays its home games from one municipality to another.

"(3) The term 'government authority' means any unit of general local government or other government agency or authority which exercises regulatory authority with respect to a professional sports team.

"(4) The term 'municipality' means a city, county or other political subdivision of a state.".

U.S. SENATE,
Washington, DC, December 13, 1984.

Commissioner PETE ROZELLE,
The National Football League, New York, NY.

DEAR COMMISSIONER ROZELLE: Following our discussion yesterday morning, I have a suggestion for action by you and and the NFL owners when you meet next Tuesday, December 18.

It is my thought that the NFL should establish a timetable, with appropriate notice under your Bylaws, to convene a meeting of league owners at the earliest practical date to establish rules which would preclude the move of the Eagles from Philadelphia to Phoenix or any similar move of an NFL franchise.

I urge that you and the owners adopt a rule which would establish standards for a team move and would require a simple majority vote of the owners to allow that move under the application of those standards. As you doubtless know, the court in the Raiders case suggested that a simple majority vote would be within the rule of reason and the opinions in that case referred to the establishment of standards governing such moves.

As to standards, it seems to me that it would be appropriate to consider factors such as fan support, length of tenure of the team in the city, the condition of the stadium, the profitability of the team over a reasonable period such as three years, and similar factors.

If prompt action were taken by the National Football League, such a rule could be in place before the move of the Eagles from Philadelphia to Phoenix could be fully consummated.

If the NFL were to adopt such a rule in response to the Raiders' court decisions and the move of the Colts and the prospective move of the Eagles, it is my thought that the Congress would be very sympathetic to legislation which would make it plain that such a rule did not violate antitrust laws. When considering that rule, I think the Congress would also be favorably disposed to "sprinkling holy water," as you put it in our conversation yesterday, on some of the other rules which the NFL needs for the orderly processing of its business.

In the light of the serious complication that an Eagles move to Phoenix would present on the pending antitrust suit by the USFL against the NFL, it seems to me that there is strong motivation for the NFL to act at this time on the Eagles situation and any similar moves.

It is my strong recommendation that the NFL act on its own to establish what it considers reasonable rules instead of leaving the matter to the Congress which, as you know, is quite unpredictable. Senator Gorton and I have discussed collaborating on reintroducing legislation which, we think, would have a good chance of passing the Congress. Last year the Commerce Committee voted out the Gorton bill.

At my request, Senator Thurmond, Chairman of the Judiciary Committee has promised early hearings on the legislation which I propose to introduce.

While in the private practice of law before coming to the Senate, I worked in the antitrust field, and it is my thinking that such an NFL rule would be interpreted by the courts not to violate the antitrust laws. In any event, I do believe there would be strong sentiment in the Congress to remove any doubt that such a rule does not violate the antitrust laws which could be accomplished by a relatively simple amendment to the antitrust laws in the 99th Congress.

I am available to discuss this matter with you further.

Sincerely,

ARLEN SPECTER.

U.S. SENATE,
Washington, DC, December 17, 1984.

Commissioner PETE ROZELLE,
The National Football League, New York, NY.

DEAR COMMISSIONER ROZELLE: I am writing to express my very serious concern over the national problem which has been created by the failure of the National Football League to establish reasonable standards, within the context of the antitrust laws, to regulate the transfer of football franchises.

While the latest chapter has involved major costs for the City of Philadelphia and the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania on concessions to retain the Eagles in Philadelphia, this has been a continuing problem which has resulted in enormous costs in other situations including Baltimore, Maryland; Oakland, California; Minneapolis, Minnesota; and Buffalo, New York. If the NFL had acted to establish such reasonable rules, those costs could have been avoided, with such cities having been able to bargain in a reasonable context with owners of football franchises without the coercive effects of threats to move.

Some have raised a question about the propriety of Congressional action on private property rights of franchise owners. A conclusive answer on the justification of such Congressional action is provided by the antitrust exemption which Congress has given to the pooling of television receipts for professional football. There can be little doubt that the owner of the Philadelphia Eagles would not have considered moving to Phoenix, Arizona, if he were substituting Phoenix's TV receipts for the TV receipts of the Philadelphia market which is the fourth largest in the United States.

As you know from our prior conversations and from Senate bill 2821 which I introduced in the 97th Congress, it is my view that a sports franchise, like ownership of an NFL football team, is different from an ordinary business. If the National Football League does not establish reasonable rules for transfer of franchises, then it is the appropriate prerogative of the Congress in my judgment to balance the interests of fans and cities with the proprietary interests of owners.

This issue has again come to a sharp national focus with the events of the past few days involving the possible move of the Philadelphia Eagles to Phoenix, Arizona. Had the National Football League established standards for franchise moves which would have been applicable to the Philadelphia Eagles' situation, there is no doubt that the Eagles could not have moved from Philadelphia considering the fans' support, profitability of the franchise, and the accommodations of Veterans Stadium which was constructed in 1971.

As I see it, the National Football League, rather than the taxpayers of the City of Philadelphia, should bear the cost of any concessions which have been made to keep the Eagles in Philadelphia because those concessions could not have been extracted under the threat of an Eagles' move if the NFL had fulfilled its duty to establish reasonable standards for such franchise moves.

In asserting the NFL's responsibility for such costs, I put aside for the moment any issue as to whether the Eagles' owner acted properly in the context of his exerting the leverage which he was able to employ given the situation caused by the NFL's inaction. Similarly, for the moment, I put aside any issue as to whether the City of Philadelphia acted properly in making the concessions to the Eagles' owner given the pending NFL lawsuit against the Eagles and the City's potential legal remedies to secure injunctive relief to stop the Eagles' move. Whatever conclusions there may be as to those issues, it seems to me that the ultimate responsibility must be borne by the National Football League which had and has the duty, as I see it, to bear whatever costs may be involved in preventing the Eagles from leaving the City of Philadelphia.

It is my thinking that the Congress must act if the National Football League does not establish appropriate standards on its own to prevent the recurrence of what has happened in Minneapolis, Buffalo, Baltimore, Oakland and Philadelphia.

As a separate issue, it is my preliminary thought that the Congress should reconsider the antitrust exemption to the pooling of television receipts where the City and its taxpayers are compelled to make substantial concessions to retain the Eagles and the City of Philadelphia, its taxpayers and the fans in the region are precluded from a fair share of the economic benefits which the enormous television revenues from the Philadelphia Eagles bring to the National Football League. If the antitrust exemption for pooling of TV revenues did not exist, then it is plain that the Eagles would not have conceivably considered leaving such a lucrative television market for the Phoenix TV area. Those TV revenues are generated by the Eagles' fans in the Philadelphia region and those fans are being asked to pay again through these additional concessions.

Given the many problems currently confronting the Congress, it is my hope that it will not be necessary for the Congress to consider legislation on issues like standards for franchises or revocation of the antitrust exemption on pooling of TV revenues; but such consideration will have to be undertaken if the current chaotic situation continues. My survey shows that 31 states are involved with football, basketball, baseball and soccer franchises so that the majority of the Congress would have good reason to be concerned that their cities and states would be affected by what is happening to the City of Philadelphia and the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

Accordingly, I urge that you and the owners act at your meeting tomorrow to see to it that the Eagles remain in Philadelphia without the City of Philadelphia or its taxpayers having to bear any costs to accomplish that result.

So that you will have the text of this letter at the earliest possible time, I am asking my secretary to read this letter to your secretary and further to make it available to the officials of the City of Philadelphia and the Philadelphia Eagles.

Sincerely,

ARLEN SPECTER.

THE NATIONAL FOOTBALL LEAGUE,
New York, NY, December 19, 1984.

Hon. ARLEN SPECTER,
Hart Senate Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR SPECTER: Thank you for your December 17 letter concerning the Eagles situation.

As to "standards" for evaluating any Eagles move, we delivered to Mr. Tose last Friday evening a memorandum identifying the factors relevant to a team move that were set forth in S. 2505, as reported by the Senate Commerce Committee in June of this year. That memorandum further directed the Eagles, among other things, to "submit to this office a written statement of the club's position with respect to the bearing of these factors on a proposed move to Phoenix, stating specifically why such a move is regarded as justified on these standards. The Eagles should also comment on any other factors you regard as relevant to the League's consideration of this matter."

More broadly, the risks created for leagues and communities by the decision of the Ninth Circuit in the Raiders case go quite beyond questions of "standards." The Los Angeles trial court submitted the case to the jury because of the potential for the Raiders to "compete" with the Rams in the Los Angeles area and to protect the opportunity of the Los Angeles Colisuem to "compete" in a stadium market by attracting teams to Los Angeles. The court's entire focus, in short, was on Los Angeles interests, while equivalent Oakland interests were utterly ignored. We have consistently urged that this approach rests on no sensible antitrust principle. However, when concepts of this type are applied, no league decision keeping a team in its existing community will be sustained.

In addition, every effort was made in Los Angeles to block any NFL action on the Raiders' move. Thus, when the Los Angeles court first entered its injunction barring League action and allowing the Raiders to move out of Oakland (an injunction that was later reversed), NFL attorneys asked the court to amend the injunction to allow the League to vote on a Raiders' move on a majority vote basis. But the Los Angeles court rejected this League proposal. Subsequently, when the Ninth Circuit reversed the preliminary injunction entered by the Los Angeles court, the Circuit's opinion expressly noted that the Raiders' entire effort had been to thwart any League evaluation of the Raiders' move, stating:

"The Raiders deliberately refrained from seeking a vote. They attacked Section 4.3 * * * without first determining whether that perceived barrier was shadow or substance."

Many other aspects of these team relocation issues cloud the suggestion that sports leagues can simply adopt more "reasonable" rules for dealing with member club transfers and continue to exercise controls over their franchise locations. For example, the National Basketball Association, which is currently litigating the property of a unilateral move of its San Diego franchise to Los Angles, is now confronting the claim that the Ninth Circuit's opinion in the Raiders case gives "a member of a sports league * * * the unfettered right to move its franchise anywhere at any time, and that any restriction of any kind on the alleged right of a team unilaterally to select the location of its games" is unlawful. See the enclosed Brief filed by the NBA in the Supreme Court in the Raiders' case, pages 4-5. The Los Angeles Stadium interests—represented by noted plaintiffs' antitrust lawyer Maxwell Blecher, who represented co-plaintiff Los Angeles Coliseum Commission in the Raiders case—are asserting that claim despite the NBA's adoption of an elaborate procedural mechanism to ensure express consideration of various objective factors governing team relocation.

Moreover, I am advised that the NBA's new rules do not even take account of "fan loyalty" considerations in the city the team proposes to leave—presumably because the NBA is uncertain whether the Ninth Circuit's majority opinion, despite its dicta, really permits consideration of such important interests at all.

Given the importance of these matters, we will plan to furnish further information and observations to you. In the meantime, I can assure you that the League has carefully reviewed all of the court opinions on team-move matters, and we intend to continue to adhere to reasonable procedures and practices on such matters.

Sincerely,

PETE ROZELLE,
Commissioner.

U.S. SENATE,
Washington, DC, December 27, 1984.

Commissioner PETE ROZELLE,
The National Football League, Park Avenue, New York, NY.

DEAR COMMISSIONER ROZELLE: I am very much concerned about the future of the Philadelphia Eagles in light of the very heavy financial commitments of the Philadelphia Eagles and owner, Mr. Leonard Tose, as reported by the Philadelphia Inquirer.

According to an extensive account by the Inquirer on Sunday, December 23, 1984, there is an accumulation of debt of $9.9 million at the end of 1981 to $14.1 million at the end of 1982 to approximately $30 million at the present time. The Inquirer further states that the "signature of NFL Commissioner Pete Rozelle appears on letters endorsing the Eagles' loans."

These heavy debts pose a very serious problem for the Eagles' cash flow because of heavy interest payments to say nothing about retirement of debt. In turn, these financial problems may have a serious impact on the Eagles' ability to stay competitive or to produce a winning football team. An owner's ability to pay top salaries and otherwise draw top players establishes a direct relationship between a team's cash position and the talent necessary to have a winning team. The fact that the Raiders had the largest payroll (as reported in the news media) has a direct relationship to their long-standing winning record and two Super Bowl championships since 1981.

Against this background, it seems to me that the Eagles' future could be very grim. If the Eagles do not have the financial resouces to field a competitive/winning team, then attendance is likely to fall; and we may be confronted with the situation where the team might be able to establish a case for moving because of lack of sufficient fan support. It seems to me that the National Football League has a significant responsibility in this matter if the Inquirer reports are accurate that these loans were, in effect, sanctioned by you as Commissioner.

I would very much appreciate your informing me of the role which the NFL plays in approving any loans to NFL team owners where the Club is (or for that matter is not) used for collateral. In the same vein, I would appreciate the details on the loans to the Eagles or Mr. Tose and your projections for repayment of interest and principal. The principal question is: Can the interest be carried and the loans repaid and still have the Eagles able to field a competitive/winning team?

I very much appreciate your letter of December 19, 1984; but, as you know, there are a number of unanswered questions remaining from my letters of December 13 and 17. I continue to be concerned about concessions that have been made by the City of Philadelphia, and I believe those costs should be borne by the National Football League because the City would not have had to have made those concessions if there had not been a threat of an Eagles' move which would have been precluded had the NFL fulfilled its duty to establish reasonable standards for such franchise moves.

One of the concessions, the deferral of the team's annual stadium rental for 10 years, is especially problemsome because it adds to the projected debt. According to the Inquirer article, the 1983 rental was $817,000. On a ten-year projection, considering interest that debt would exceed $10 million. Aside from the fact that the City should not bear that expense, it is most unwise to structure an additional factor which adds to the Eagles' debt.

In the context of our prior correspondence and conversations, I would appreciate your making available to me at the earliest moment the figures on what the Eagles' share would have been from its own TV market and its post-season play from TV if the revenue sharing on TV receipts were not in effect, as sanctioned by the antitrust exemption.

After the first of the year, I look forward to the opportunity to meet with you in person concerning these and other matters of mutual interest.

My best to you and yours for the New Year.

Sincerely,

ARLEN SPECTER.

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, my interest in the reform of our antitrust laws as they relate to professional team sports leagues is longstanding. On July 28, 1982, Senators HEFLIN, SIMPSON, HUDDLESTON, BENTSEN, and I introduced the Major League Sports Community Protection Act of 1982. This bill and its successor in the 98th Congress, S. 1036, the Sports Community Protection and Stability Act of 1983, sought to deal with the fundamental antitrust question at the heart of the confusion currently surrounding the status of professional team sports leagues under our antitrust laws. I intend to introduce soon a similar bill that addresses this matter while dealing with related issues that have arisen since 1982. I will be consulting with my colleagues in the Senate, and particularly the membership of the Judiciary Committee, to determine their views on this matter, especially in light of recent controversies over the movement of teams in professional football, baseball, and basketball.

A number of principles will be guiding me and my staff as we seek to improve upon the legislation that I previously introduced and which enjoyed wide support among Members of the House and the Senate as well as with local government officials. First, effective legislation designed to protect sports communities from arbitrary abandonment by club owners must deal with the inability of professional sports leagues to prevent such movement under the current application of antitrust concepts.

Second, effective legislation must ensure the continued stability of professional team sports leagues by allowing leagues to enforce rules that tend to promote comparable economic opportunities for member clubs. If the farsighted revenue sharing rules adopted by some leagues are made enforceable, the temptation for teams to hopscotch across the country seeking marginal economic advantage at the expense of loyal fans will be curbed.

Third, instability in the operation of professional team sports leagues is not in the interest of sports fans, sports communities, or communities where potential expansion could occur. My State and the community of Phoenix has a large stake in the future of professional team sports leagues. As a representative of one of the fastest growing and most attractive sports communities, I want to ensure that investment and commitments by my constituents will be reciprocated and produce a long-standing, stable relationship.

Fourth, effective legislation should recognize that, as the Washington Post stated recently:

NFL teams are obviously not competitors as steel companies or computer soft-ware firms are; they are struggling not to put each out of business but to stay in business together. To do that, they obviously have to act together in ways that wouldn't be allowed if they were entirely separate competitors. Applying the antitrust laws to intraleague agreements threatens the entire structure of professional sports.

Fifth, effective legislation should not put Congress or the courts in the business of second-guessing the business judgment of leagues when it is properly exercised following appropriate procedures which ensure that arbitrary and capricious action is avoided.

Last, the legislation should be as narrow as possible and not tamper with antitrust monopolization concepts or the right of a municipality or other public authority to challenge under the antitrust laws the relocation of a club from its league-franchised home area.

Let me emphasize the degree of caution I bring to this and any legislative effort in the antitrust area. Our antitrust laws have been carefully developed through the years by the courts and Congress. However, in the area of professional team sports leagues, and particularly with regard to team movement issues, it is clear that the laws are simply not working. The public is suffering as a result, and the future of professional league sports in this country is in jeopardy.

I believe a fully competitive entertainment and sports industry can be maintained while bringing a measure of certainty to the enforcement of rules that have been clearly recognized to be in the public interest. The experience of the last 3 years has demonstrated to this Senator, and I believe to the rest of Congress, the need for such legislation. Further delay will only risk harming more sports fans and sports communities. As I pointed out on April 12, 1983, when Senators LONG, HEFLIN, Tower, HEINZ, BENTSEN, QUAYLE, JOHNSTON and I introduced the 1983 Sports Community Protection and Stability Act:

Unless Congress acts, it is possible for a team owner to put a franchise up for auction at the end of the season to the highest bidder who could then move the franchise anywhere in the country. * * * Unless Congress acts, leagues may be unable to expand due to instability in team location policies and expand due to instability in team location policies and uncertainty as to revenue distribution. If Congress does not act, the tragedy of the abandonment of the city of Oakland, its publicly funded stadium, and its sports fans by the Oakland Raiders will not only stand uncorrected, but it could be duplicated.

I believe these words have proven true in the last 2 years. I urge my colleagues to join with me in crafting balanced legislation to deal with this antitrust problem of wide interest to all of our constituents.

By Mr. STAFFORD (for himself and Mr. LEAHY):

S. 173. A bill to settle and adjust the claim of the Tehran American School for $13,333.94; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

TEHRAN AMERICAN SCHOOL CLAIM ACT OF 1985

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. President, on behalf of myself and my colleague from Vermont (Mr. LEAHY), I introduce today the Tehran American School Claim Act of 1985.

The purpose of the legislation is to permit the U.S. Government to reimburse the Tehran American School $13,333.94 due from the sale of school motor vehicles arranged by the U.S. Embassy in Tehran, Iran, in 1979.

The proceeds from the sale were lost as a result of the seizure of the U.S. Embassy, and this legislation is required to permit payment under terms of the Meritorious Claims Act.

The claim was originally filed with the Department of State by William F. Keough, who was the superintendent of schools for the Tehran American School. Mr. Keough previously had served as a superintendent of schools in several Vermont communities.

This legislation is introduced at the suggestion of the Comptroller General of the United States, who has judged the loss of the funds by the State Department to be the result of an "uncontrollable event" and who has found the claim to have merit under the terms of the Meritorious Claims Act.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point the claim filed by Mr. Keough, along with a supporting document; a letter from the acting Comptroller General to Mr. Keough; the decision of the Comptroller General regarding the claim; the report to the Congress by the Comptroller General recommending that payment of the claim be authorized, and the text of the legislation introduced by myself and Mr. LEAHY.

There being no objection, the bill and material were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

COMPTROLLER GENERAL
OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, DC, June 15, 1982.

Mr. WILLIAM F. KEOUGH,
Superintendant of Schools, Tehran American School.

DEAR MR. KEOUGH: Enclosed is a copy of our decision in which we disallow the Tehran American School's claim for $13,333.94 as part of the proceeds from the sale of three School vehicles. The sale was arranged by the United States Embassy in Tehran, Iran. On the other hand, we think that the equities warrant reporting the claim to the Congress of the United States under the Meritorious Claims Act of April 10, 1928, 31 U.S.C. § 236.

No further action on the claim can be taken by our Office unless, and until, the Congress enacts legislation pursuant to our recommendation. We enclose a copy of our report to the Congress recommending that payment of the claim be authorized.

Sincerely yours,

MILTON J. SOCOLAR,
Acting Comptroller General of the United States.

DECISION

File: B-205984. Date: June 15, 1982.
Matter of: Tehran American School—Reimbursement of Funds.
Digest:

1. The State Department cannot pay the Tehran American School $13,333.94 due from the sale of School motor vehicles arranged by the United States Embassy in Tehran, Iran, since the Embassy as agent did not breach any duty owed to the School. The proceeds from the sale were lost as a result of seizure of the United States Embassy—an uncontrollable event. Moreover, the Embassy acted properly in commingling the proceeds of the sale with other receipts in the Embassy safe.

2. Claim is to be reported to the Congress under the Meritorious Claims Act, 31 U.S.C. § 236, since seizure and occupation of the United States Embassy and resulting loss of proceeds from the Embassy's sale of the School's vehicles, was an extraordinary circumstance calling for equitable consideration.

The Department of State has requested an advance decision on whether it can pay the Tehran American School $13,333.94 as part of the proceeds from a sale of three School vehicles that was arranged by the United States Embassy in Tehran, Iran. Although we conclude that the State Department cannot make the payment, we think the equities warrant our reporting the claim to the United States Congress under the Meritorious Claims Act of April 10, 1928, 31 U.S.C. § 236.

The facts show that as a result of the political tensions in Iran in 1979, in anticipation of closing, the Tehran American School arranged that the United States Embassy in Tehran sell three of the School's motor vehicles. The State Department informs us that United States Embassies provide this kind of assistance to American institutions operating in foreign countries. Although state indicates that occasionally the proceeds from these sales are givenly directly to the seller, since the school had closed, the moneys were placed in the Embassy cashier's safe with other receipts normally kept in the safe. These receipts regularly were deposited in an account at the Tehran bank used by the Embassy.

As payment, the Embassy intended to have the United States disbursing office in Paris issue a $13,333.94 Treasury check drawn on funds deposited in the Tehran bank used by the Embassy. ($18,194.74 from the sale minus amounts owed by the School to the Embassy for outstanding telephone bills and other payables.) As a result of the Embassy seizure, however, the safe was lost and never recovered and the Paris disbursing office was not notified to make the payment.

The State Department has concluded that the sale of the motor vehicles was made in accordance with Department regulations, that the funds were properly maintained in the safe, and that the loss was not due to negligence. Although a Departmental legal memorandum presents arguments for and against paying the claim, State has concluded that the United States is responsible for the funds and that payment to the School is warranted.[1]

The legal memorandum accompanying the State Department submission characterized the relationship between the Embassy and the School as that between agent and principal. In this regard, it stated that if a principal's property is lost or stolen through no fault of the agent, generally the principal must bear the loss. It also noted that where an agent is authorized to commingle the principal's funds with the agent's to carry out the purposes of the agency, the agent is not liable for the loss. In support of this argument the memo suggests that the Embassy "appears to have been at least impliedly authorized to collect the proceeds of the sale in Iranian rupees and to commingle these funds with others on deposit with the Embassy * * * ". On the other hand, the memo points out that agents often are required to segregate a principal's funds from their own and that commingling will make the agent a debtor of the principal.

We agree with the State Department that the relationship between the School and the Embassy was that of principal and agent. As such, the question raised is whether the Embassy breached its agent's duty to the School so as to make the Embassy liable to the School for loss of the proceeds from the sale of the vehicles.

An agent entrusted with the care and custody of his principal's property is a bailee of the property. See, Preston v. Prather, 137 U.S. 604, 613-14 (1891). Where the property involved is the money of a principal, the agent is required to keep it in a safe place, Robbins v. Roumel, 138 A.2d 922, 923 (Mun. Ct. App. D.C. 1958); however, the agent is not an insurer of its safety and absent negligence will not be liable if the money is lost or stolen. E.g., Cave v. Lougee, 67 S.E. 667 (Ga. 1910); New Mexico Department of Health and Social Services v. Secretary of Agriculture, 376 F. Supp. 953, 954-55 (D. Mex. 1973).

[1] The Department also has concluded that the Hostage Agreements between the United States and Iran precluded the United States from submitting the claim either to the Iranian Government or the Iran-United States Claims Tribunal.

In this instance there is nothing in the record to suggest that the Embassy breached its duty to protect the School's monies. The funds in the safe were lost as a result of the seizure of the American Embassy, an event over which the United States had no control. Further, the State Department appears to have been acting appropriately in its placing the School's money in its safe.

Generally an agent entrusted with a principal's money must keep it separately from his own, and, upon commingling the funds he becomes a debtor to the principal. United States v. Marienfeld, 116 F. Supp. 634, 638 (E.D. Mo. 1953), aff'd., 214 F. 2d 632, cert. denied 348 U.S. 865. On the other hand, a principal may consent to the agent's commingling his funds with the agent's, and the risk of loss of the funds is shifted back from the agent to the principal. 116 F. Supp. at 638.

The facts show that the Embassy's commingling of the proceeds from the sale of the School's vehicles with other receipts in the safe was in the normal course of business and impliedly was undertaken with the School's consent. In this instance, the proceeds from the sale of the vehicles could not have been paid directly by the buyers to the School since the School had closed. The Embassy took the cash proceeds intending to deposit them in the bank with its normal weekly deposits and to order a Treasury check drawn against them. But for the seizure of the Embassy, the funds in the Embassy safe, including the receipts from the sale, would have been deposited in that bank. Since the school did not object to the Embassy following its regular procedures, we agree with the State Department memo that the School impliedly agreed to the commingling of the sale proceeds with other monies in the Embassy safe, and in accordance with the principles discussed above, the risk of loss was shifted to the School. It follows that since it was in no way negligent, the Embassy is not legally liable to the School for the loss of the $13,333.94.

Although we must disallow the claim, we conclude that the equities in this case warrant our reporting the claim to the United States Congress under the Meritorious Claims Act of 1928, 31 U.S.C. § 236. The Meritorious Claims Act provides that when a claim is filed in this Office that may not be lawfully adjusted by use of an appropriation theretofore made, but which claim, in our judgment, contains such elements of legal liability or equity as to be deserving of the consideration of Congress, it shall be submitted to the Congress with our recommendations. The remedy is an extraordinary one and its use is limited to extraordinary circumstances.

The cases we have reported for the consideration of the Congress generally have involved equitable circumstances of an unusual nature and which are unlikely to constitute a recurring problem, since to report to the Congress a particular case when similar equities exist or are likely to arise with respect to other claimants would constitute preferential treatment over others in similar circumstances. 53 Comp. Gen. 157, 158 (1973).

We think the seizure and occupation of the United States Embassy, and the resulting loss of the proceeds from the Embassy's sale of the School's vehicles, was an extraordinary circumstance calling for equitable consideration. Although other individuals and institutions were damaged by the hostilities in Iran, the State Department has informed us that it is not aware of any similar claims in which the Government had the direct responsibility for safeguarding the private party's funds. Also, the other parties, though apparently not the School, could have presented their claims to the Iran-United States Claims Tribunal. Accordingly, our report and recommendation that payment of the claim be authorized will be forwarded to the Congress.

MILTON J. SOCOLAR,
Acting Comptroller General
of the United States.

B-205984, June 15, 1982.

To the Congress of the United States:

The Meritorious Claims Act of April 10, 1928, 45 Stat. 413, 31 U.S.C. § 236 (1976), provides that:

"When there is filed in the General Accounting Office a claim or demand against the United States that may not lawfully be adjusted by the use of an appropriation theretofore made, but which claim or demand in the judgment of the Comptroller General of the United States contains such elements of legal liability or equity as to be deserving of the consideration of the Congress, he shall submit the same to the Congress by a special report containing the material facts and his recommendation thereon."

In accordance with that Act, we make the following report and recommendation on the claim of the Tehran American School for $13,333.94.

The facts in this case show that as a result of the political tensions in Iran in 1979, in anticipation of closing, the Tehran American School arranged that the United States Embassy in Tehran sell three of the School's motor vehicles. The State Department informed us that United States Embassies provide this kind of assistance to American institutions operating in foreign countries. Although State indicated that occasionally the proceeds from these sales are given directly to the seller, since the School had closed, the monies were placed in the Embassy cashier safe with other receipts normally kept in the safe. The other receipts regularly were deposited in an account at the Tehran bank used by the Embassy.[1]

For payment, the Embassy intended to have the United States disbursing office in Paris issue a $13,333.94 Treasury check drawn on funds deposited in the Tehran bank used by the Embassy. ($18,194.74 from the sale minus amounts owned by the School to the Embassy for outstanding telephone bills and other payables.) As a result of the Embassy seizure, however, the safe was lost and never recovered and the Paris disbursing office was not notified to make the payment.

In its submission to us the State Department stated that the sale of the motor vehicles was made in accordance with Department regulations, the funds were properly maintained in the safe, and the loss was not due to negligence. The Department also concluded that the United States was responsible for the funds and that payment to the School was warranted.[2]

We agreed with the State Department's characterization of the relationship between the School and the Embassy as that of principal and agent. As such, we concluded that there was nothing in the record to suggest that the Embassy breached its duty as agent to exercise reasonable care to protect the School's monies. The funds in the safe were lost as a result of the seizure of the American Embassy—an uncontrollable event.

We also found that the Embassy's commingling of the proceeds from the sale of the School's vehicle with other receipts in the safe was in the normal course of business and impliedly was undertaken with the School's consent. The proceeds from the sale of the vehicles could not have been paid directly by the buyer to the School since the School had closed. The Embassy took the cash proceeds intending to draw a Treasury check against the funds deposited in the Tehran bank used by the Embassy. But for the seizure of the Embassy, the funds in the Embassy safe, including the receipts from the sale, would have been deposited in that bank. There is nothing in the record to indicate that the School objected to the Embassy following its regular procedures for payment. Since the commingling of the proceeds of the sale with other monies in the Embassy safe was proper, we determined that the risk of loss was shifted to the School. Thus, the Embassy was not liable to the School for the $13,333.94.

The Meritorious Claims Act is an extraordinary remedy whose use is limited to extraordinary circumstances. The cases we have reported for the consideration of the Congress generally have involved equitable circumstances of an unusual nature, and which are unlikely to constitute a recurring problem, since to report to the Congress a particular case when similar equities exist or are likely to arise with respect to other claimants would constitute preferential treatment over others in similar circumstances. 53 Comp. Gen. 157, 158 (1973).

We think the seizure and occupation of the United States Embassy and resulting loss of the proceeds from the sale of the School's vehicles, was an extraordinary circumstance calling for equitable consideration. Although other individuals and institutions were damaged by the hostilities in Iran, the State Department has informed us that it is not aware of any similar claims in which the Government had the direct responsibility for safeguarding the private party's funds.

If the Congress agrees with our recommendation, it is suggested that enactment of a statute in substantially the following form will accomplish the desired result:

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, that the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to settle and adjust the claim of the Tehran American School for $13,333.94 which amount constitutes proceeds from

ALZHEIMER'S DISEASE AND RELATED DISORDERS TREATMENT ACT OF 1985

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation to establish 20 major Alzheimer's treatment centers around the country. There is currently no prevention or cure for the disease which now afflicts more than 4 million Americans, or about 10 percent of those over 65. More research and treatment is critically needed to help bring this disease under control as our population continues to age.

The legislation is identical to a bill (H.R. 5863) introduced in the House of Representatives during the 98th Congress by Congressman CLAUDE PEPPER. I was a cosponsor of Congressman PEPPER's legislation, and am introducing it at this time so that the issue will be on the agenda early in the 99th Congress.

Alzheimer's disease, which has been likened by the families of victims as a funeral that lasts for years, causes loss of memory and confusion in its victims, and may in time prevent victims from taking care of themselves. In many cases, the patient may lose the ability to speak and to recognize even close relatives. Its cause is not known. The disease may last a few years to a few decades.

There have been some recent breakthroughs which have identified specific areas of the brain apparently responsible for the loss of intellectual abilities associated with Alzheimer's disease. A greater nationwide research effort and treatment could move us closer to the answers to the many questions about the disease.

S. 175. A bill to limit the costs resulting from acts of negligence in health care and to improve the level of health care services in the United States, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

HEALTH CARE PROTECTION ACT OF 1985

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, during the past three Congresses, I have introduced legislation entitled the Health Care Protection Act which, if enacted, would establish uniform Federal standards for a network of health care malpractice screening panels across the Nation.

The bill, which I am again reintroducing today, is an outgrowth of our deliberations during the 1975 crisis in the medical malpractice insurance area. At that time, we appeared to have a crisis of availability; however, today, there would appear to be a growing crisis in affordability.

I was recently informed, for example, that a report by the American Medical Association [AMA] indicated that physicians currently pay approximately $1.7 billion in malpractice premiums. These expenses add $5 a day to the cost of every hospital stay and $3 to $4 to the cost of every visit to a physician.

I was most pleased that during the 98th Congress committees with jurisdiction, in both the U.S. House of Representatives and the U.S. Senate, held formal hearings on the professional liability medical malpractice issue. This is a very complex matter; however, I do feel it is one which we must affirmatively address in the near future if we ever hope to curtail the ever-escalating costs of health care in our Nation.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of my bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 175

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Health Care Protection Act of 1985".

SEC. 2. CONGRESSIONAL FINDINGS AND STATEMENT OF PURPOSE.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

(1) the health care professions and the health care industry serve needs vital to the continuing health and welfare of the American people and form a vital part of commerce between the States;

(2) every person needs ready and economical access to medical and other health care services for full participation in American society and for full exercise of individual rights;

(3) the health care professions and the health care industry apply national standards of health care to State and regional needs and circumstances;

(4) the need to compensate persons injured by avoidable acts of health care negligence or malpractice and the resultant costs of malpractice insurance significantly increase the costs of medical and other health care services and products;

(5) divergent systems for insuring against, and for litigating and compensating, health care malpractice claims further raise the cost of needed malpractice insurance and prevent speedy compensation of injured persons;

(6) a large majority of the cost of premiums paid for malpractice insurance goes to investigating or litigating malpractice claims in State courts, while less than one-third of the premium costs are used to compensate persons injured by malpractice;

(7) many more incidents of health care malpractice occur than result in a claim for damages, and many valid claims for compensation are prevented because of the high costs of trial, and, conversely, many claims of malpractice are unjustified but result in settlements or awards for damages out of sympathy for the physical condition of the claimant;

(8) the costs of insurance protection against malpractice, and the risk of liability for compensation, burden both the health care providers and their patients and raise the cost of health care goods and services;

(9) the costs and risks referred to in paragraph (8) also increase the costs to the United States Government of carrying out its programs for aiding the people and the States in meeting health care needs, and affect the extent to which the United States may be financially liable for health care services afforded by its own officers or employees, including the military services and veterans and public health care programs;

(10) failure to compensate adequately persons injured by health care malpractice adversely affects the general health and welfare of the people of the United States and burdens commerce between the States;

(11) many States have experimented successfully with nonjudicial malpractice claims systems using screening panels to reduce the costs of processing malpractice claims;

(12) the examination, prior to litigation, of claims regarding health care malpractice by malpractice screening panels organized by the States according to uniform Federal standards will aid materially in reaching just and timely resolutions of such claims at much lower administrative and litigation costs than the costs now incurred under the existing system of direct tort litigation and malpractice insurance;

(13) members of the public and responsible public officials of the States are entitled to be informed in all instances in which health care malpractice is found by a malpractice screening panel or a court, in order to protect against the risk of further malpractice and to minimize the necessary costs of insurance protection;

(14) a small percentage of health care providers account for a disproportionately high percentage of all malpractice claims, and for an even higher percentage of insurance payments to persons injured by health care malpractice; and

(15) because insurance premiums are usually set for an entire specialty group in a given region, the high-risk health care providers do not bear a financial burden proportionate to the amount of injury such providers cause, and therefore no effective financial incentive exists for the safe practice of medicine and other health care specialties.

(b) STATEMENT OF PURPOSE.—The purpose of this Act is to provide minimum Federal standards for the creation by each State of health care malpractice screening panels and procedures that will reduce the costs to the public and to the health care professions of malpractice, and that will provide full and expeditious compensation to the victims of health care malpractice.

SEC. 3. DEFINITIONS.

For purposes of this Act—

(1) "malpractice" means malpractice, or professional negligence, by an individual or group that provides health care services or goods and that is required by State law to be licensed or certified to provide such services or goods within the State;

(2) "panel" means a malpractice screening panel established pursuant to section 5;

(3) "division" means a division of a malpractice screening panel that is authorized to hear and decide malpractice claims pursuant to this Act;

(4) "State insurance commissioner" means the officer or agency of State government charged with licensing or regulating the business of providing insurance against claims of malpractice within the State; and

(5) "State program" means the State program for compensation of and reduction of health care malpractice described in section 4.

SEC. 4. UNIFORM STANDARDS FOR COMPENSATION FOR HEALTH CARE MALPRACTICE.

(a) STATE PROGRAM FOR COMPENSATION.—Each State shall be encouraged to establish, within four years after the date of enactment of this Act, a program for compensation and reduction of health care malpractice that complies with the provisions of this Act, and that consists of the establishment of malpractice screening panels in accordance with section 5 and the establishment of a State health care facility risk management program in accordance with section 7. The State may establish the State program by legislative, executive, or judicial action, as authorized by the laws and constitution of the State.

(b) ATTORNEY GENERAL REGULATIONS.—The Attorney General shall have authority to promulgate regulations for the interpretation and implementation of this Act. Within one year after the date of enactment of this Act, the Attorney General shall issue regulations concerning the certification of State programs in accordance with section 8 of this Act and for payments to States under section 9 of this Act.

SEC. 5. MALPRACTICE SCREENING PANELS.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—Each State shall be encouraged to establish one or more malpractice screening panels to hear all claims of health care malpractice against persons in the State who are licensed or certified by the State to provide health care services or who provide health care services for which State law requires a license or certification. Each State shall, after consultation with the Attorney General, publish a list of the health care professions that are so licensed or certified and the health care professions of which members provide health care services so licensed or certified. If the State establishes more than one panel, the jurisdiction of the panels may be divided by geographic area within the State or by health care specialty.

(b) MEMBERSHIP AND APPOINTMENT.—(1) A malpractice screening panel shall have at least three members, chosen and appointed under the laws or constitution of the State. A State may require that a panel sit as a single body or may authorize the panel to sit in smaller divisions of at least three members. Each panel, and each division before which a claim is heard, shall include at least one licensed or certified health care professional, one person admitted to practice law in the courts of the State, and one layperson who represents consumers and is not affiliated with a health care practitioner or health service institution, and may include such other members as the State shall provide. The State may annex a panel to a court of the State. The State shall specify the method of selection and assignment of members of each panel and any division thereof in a manner that assures that each panel and division will afford a full and fair hearing to all parties to any claim brought before it. The members of each panel shall be selected without regard to gender, race, religion, or national origin.

(2) The State shall provide that any member or employee of a panel or division is immune from suit for defamation, libel, or slander, arising from the performance of his official duties with the panel or division, unless malice or actual knowledge of the falsity of a defamatory statement is proved.

(c) JURISDICTION AND RULES OF PROCEDURE.—The State shall be encouraged to provide for the following:

(1) Each panel shall have original and exclusive jurisdiction within the State, or such area of the State or health care specialty as State law shall provide, to hear and decide any claim for damages resulting from injury or death incurred as a consequence of health care malpractice by an individual, group, or organization that is required to be licensed or certified by the State in order to provide health care goods or services in that State.

(2) Except as provided in subsection (j) or as provided for claims against the United States, every claim within the jurisdiction of a panel shall be filed with, heard, and decided by, the panel.

(3) The existence or absence of requisite injury, causation, negligence, malpractice, or any other element of a claim, or defense to a claim, shall be determined under the law of the State, but the State shall authorize each panel and the person who appoints the panel to establish rules of procedure for fair and expedited hearing and decision of claims. All such rules of procedure shall be published and made available to the public.

(d) CLAIM AND ANSWER.—Each State shall be encouraged to provide that a claim for damages resulting from injury or death incurred as a consequence of health care malpractice shall be filed with a panel within the State in which the malpractice allegedly occurred. The State shall specify the procedure for filing a claim, including a procedure for transfer to the appropriate panel of a claim improperly filed with a court or with the wrong panel, and shall require that a copy of the claim and any accompanying documents be served at the time the claim is filed on each person alleged to have caused the injury, each of whom shall be named as a defendant. The State shall require that each defendant answer the claim in timely fashion and completely. The State shall provide that a filed claim (1) fully describe the alleged malpractice that gave rise to the claim, the nature and extent of the injury that resulted, and the manner in which the injury took place, (2) list the names of all persons who may be liable for the malpractice and describe each person's role in the malpractice, and (3) list the names of all expert witnesses who will be called in support of the claim, including their qualifications.

(e) SCREENING AND PRELIMINARY INVESTIGATION.—The panel or division to which the claim is assigned shall promptly review each claim and answer. If in the course of its review the panel or division determines that particular evidence will be needed to decide the claim, the panel or division shall notify the claimant and each defendant, and provide the claimant and defendants an opportunity to provide the evidence at or before the hearing on the claim. The panel or division may, on its own motion, engage expert consultants or witnesses during review or at a hearing, and the testimony or reports of such consultants or witnesses shall be admitted into evidence.

(f) DISCOVERY.—The panel or division may permit discovery and motion practice prior to the hearing required by subsection (g) only as specifically provided by State law for malpractice screening panels. The panel or division shall not permit discovery that, in relation to the size and nature of the claim, will burden unduly the claimant, the defendant, or any third party, or that will delay unduly the resolution of the claim.

(g) HEARING.—The panel or division shall, within one hundred and eighty days after the date on which a claim is filed, conduct a hearing on the claim. One continuance, not to exceed ninety days, may be granted to any party upon a showing that extraordinary circumstances which are not within that party's control warrant delay in the interests of justice. At the hearing, each party may be represented by counsel. The claimant shall be required to present all evidence supporting the claim, and each defendant shall be required to present all evidence rebutting or defending against that claim. Notwithstanding the rules of evidence applicable in the State's courts, the panel or division may hear and consider any relevant and material evidence, except that a State may establish and publish rules or procedures preventing the introduction of irrelevant, unprobative, or unduly repetitious evidence. A State may establish and publish such procedures for the conduct of panel hearings as comport with the due process of law and with this section. A panel or division shall be authorized to compel the appearance of witnesses and the production of documents or other evidence.

(h) PANEL OR DIVISION DECISION.—After hearing all the evidence presented by the claimant and each defendant, the panel or division shall decide whether or not the malpractice was proved, and, if the malpractice was proved, whether the injury resulted from proved malpractice of one or more of the defendants. Within thirty days after the conclusion of the hearing of the evidence (unless a delay is necessary due to extraordinary circumstances), the panel or division shall transmit a written decision to the claimant and each of the defendants. The decision shall include a statement of the findings of fact and conclusions of law on which the panel or division based its decision and determined any award under subsection (i).

(i) AWARDS OF DAMAGES.—If a panel or division finds compensable injury resulting from health care malpractice by one or more defendants, the panel or division shall determine the amount of damages owed under State law to the claimant by each liable defendant, and shall enter an order against each such defendant to pay an award in that amount. An award by a panel or division is due upon entry of the award, and a State may provide for judicial enforcement of an award that is not paid promptly. In court proceedings to enforce an order to pay an award, the only issue shall be whether payment has been made according to the terms of the order. The decision of a panel or division shall not be subject to review, except to review an allegation of fraud or of unlawful conflict of interest by a member of the panel or division that made the decision. A State shall provide that, notwithstanding any other provision of law but subject to any State law limiting the amount of recoverable damages—

(1) a panel or division may provide that any award for continuing or prospective damages of $100,000 or more be made in the form of suitable annual or other periodic payments as actual damages are incurred;

(2) a panel or division may provide that any award for damages of $200,000 or more may be satisfied by establishing a trust fund or purchasing an annuity for the life of each person to whom the award is made or during the continuance of the compensable injury or disability, with a reversionary interest in the persons liable for the award; and

(3) the timing and amounts of periodic payments or of payments from a trust fund or annuity shall be such as to avoid hardship to, and assure full compensation of, each person to whom the award is made, as determined by the panel or division.

(j) TRIAL DE NOVO IN STATE COURT.—(1) Each State shall provide that any party to a claim decided by a panel or division shall be entitled to trial de novo on the claim before a State court of appropriate jurisdiction on motion filed within sixty days after the party receives the panel's or division's decision under subsection (h). The decision of the panel or division and its written statement and order to pay an award shall be admissible as evidence in such trial on motion of any party to the panel or division hearing. Any right of trial by jury shall be preserved. If a trial de novo is held at the request of a party, that party may be liable for all costs of trial and for reasonable attorney's fees to opposing parties if, after final judgment in the State court, that party has not substantially prevailed in the action.

(2) For purposes of paragraph (1), a party has substantially prevailed in a trial de novo if—

(A) the party was a defendant at the panel or division hearing and is found by the court not to be liable for damages, or to be liable for damages in an amount which is less than the amount of the defendant's liability (as established by the panel or division) by an amount which is equal to 20 per centum of the amount of such liability or $6,000, whichever is greater; or

(B) the party was the claimant at the panel or division hearing, and the court awards damages to that claimant in an amount which exceeds the amount awarded to that claimant by the panel or division by an amount which is equal to 20 per centum of the amount awarded to the claimant by the panel or division or $6,000, whichever is greater.

(k) SETTLEMENT BEFORE DECISION OR AWARD.—The parties to a claim filed with a panel or division may enter into a settlement agreement at any time prior to the date on which the panel or division transmits a decision under subsection (h) with respect to the claim. A written copy of the agreement shall be filed with the panel or division. Any such settlement shall not provide for attorney's fees in excess of the amount authorized under section 7. Upon receiving a copy of the agreement, the panel shall close its file on the claim and shall transmit the report with respect to the settlement agreement required under subsection (l).

(l) REPORT OF FINDINGS OF MALPRACTICE OR NEGLIGENCE.—(1) The State shall require that—

(A) if a panel, division, or court finds, in making a determination with respect to a claim, that one or more defendants has committed health care malpractice, or

(B) if a settlement agreement is filed with a panel or division under subsection (k), the panel, division, or court shall, within thirty days after the panel, division, or court makes such finding or such settlement agreement is filed under subsection (k), transmit a report with respect to such finding or settlement agreement to the State insurance commissioner and the State licensing or certification board or professional conduct body, if any, with jurisdiction over the licensed or certified health care profession or industry of each defendant for which a finding of malpractice has been made or who is involved in such settlement agreement.

(2) The report required by paragraph (1) shall include—

(A) the written statement of the panel or division under subsection (h) with respect to the claim, or the verdict or opinion of the court with respect to the claim, as the case may be;

(B) any order of award of the panel, division, or court with respect to the claim; and

(C) a copy of any settlement agreement filed under subsection (k).

(3) The State insurance commissioner shall make each report received under paragraph (1) available for public inspection by any person, shall take such further action with respect to the report of malpractice as State law authorizes, and shall promptly notify each insurance company or association offering malpractice insurance for the licensed or certified profession or business within the State of—

(A) the panel's, division's, or court's finding of malpractice, including the name of each person found to have committed malpractice, the nature of the person's liability, and the amount of any award; and

(B) the terms of any settlement agreement entered into under subsection (k).

(4) The State shall provide that insurance companies or associations are authorized to adjust their rates for persons who are held liable by a panel, division, or court for malpractice, or who have entered into two or more settlement agreements under subsection (k) that require payments to claimants for malpractice within a three-year period prior to the date on which any such person applies for malpractice insurance.

(m) FILING CLAIM TOLLS STATUTE OF LIMITATION.—The State shall provide that a statute of limitation pertaining to a claim relating to malpractice is tolled from the date on which the claim is filed under subsection (d) to the date sixty days after the date on which the panel or division transmits a decision under subsection (h).

SEC. 6. AWARD OF ATTORNEYS' FEES IN MALPRACTICE ACTIONS.

(a) Each State shall provide that in any action or claim filed under this Act in which the claimant receives an award of damages, the amount of payments to the claimant's attorney shall not exceed—

(1) one-third of the amount of an award of less than $100,000;

(2) one-quarter of the amount of an award between $100,000 and $200,000;

(3) 20 per centum of the amount of an award between $200,000 and $300,000; or

(4) 15 per centum of the amount of an award in excess of $300,000.

(b) Each State shall provide that where a panel or division orders payment of an award of damages in accordance with the methods set forth in paragraph (1), (2), or (3) of section 5(i), payments of any contingent fee to the claimant's attorney shall be made out of the periodic payments therein provided for and shall in no instance be a larger fraction of such periodic payment than the proportion borne by the total fee payable under subsection (a) of this section to the total amount of damages awarded.

(c)(1) This section does not require that fees for malpractice claims be contingent fees, nor does it authorize the award of fees against a liable party except where authorized by section 5(j) or under State law.

(2) If an attorney in an action or claim under this Act accepts payment for services in such action or claim in an amount which exceeds the amount provided by this section, the attorney shall forfeit three times the amount of the excess, plus costs of recovery, to the State in any civil action for recovery brought by the State in any Federal district court within the State. The Federal district courts shall have original and exclusive jurisdiction of such actions for recovery.

SEC. 7. HEALTH CARE FACILITY RISK MANAGEMENT PROGRAMS.

(a) DEVELOPMENT OF PROGRAM.—Each State shall be encouraged to develop a program to require each licensed hospital, outpatient facility other than the office of an individual practitioner, and residential health care organization or facility within the State to employ a risk management program consistent with the provisions of this section. Each Federal health care institution in a State shall comply with the State program approved by the Attorney General of the United States under section 8. A State health care facility risk management program shall be consistent with State law and shall meet the minimum requirements set forth in subsection (b).

(b) MINIMUM REQUIREMENTS.—(1) The State health care facility risk management program shall require that each licensed hospital or residential health care organization or facility adopt procedures for—

(A) identifying and reporting to a risk management committee or office approved by the State all known or suspected incidents of malpractice by that hospital, organization, or facility, by the staff of the hospital, organization, or facility, or by persons using facilities with the permission of the hospital, organization, or facility; and

(B) identifying the causes of such incidents and suspected incidents.

(2) Each risk management committee or office approved by the State shall prepare a case file on each incident of malpractice as soon as such incident is reported, and shall investigate the merits of any likely claim of malpractice while the evidence and the reports of witnesses with respect to such claim are readily available. The case files and reports of investigations shall be made available to the patient and to the hospital or residential health care organization or facility. The reports shall be reviewed by the hospital, organization, or facility to identify actions which can be taken to reduce the risk of further incidents of the same nature.

(c) ADDITIONAL PROVISIONS.—Two or more licensed hospitals or residential health care organizations or facilities may jointly establish or use the same risk management committee or office if such committee or office has been approved by the State. Risk management committees or offices approved by the State may exchange information concerning risk experience, prevention, and management, except that such committees or offices shall not be used—

(1) for the exchange of price information in a manner forbidden by the antitrust laws of the United States;

(2) to fix prices for health care or insurance services; or

(3) to divide markets in a manner forbidden by the antitrust laws of the United States.

SEC. 8. CERTIFICATION OF QUALIFYING PROGRAM.

(a) CERTIFICATION REQUIRED.—Within two years after the date of enactment of this Act, the Governor of each State shall certify to the Attorney General of the United States whether the State has adopted a State program which in the opinion of the Governor is in compliance with the provisions of this Act. The Governor shall attach to the certification copies of all relevant State laws, rules, procedures, and regulations which are a part of the State program.

(b) EVALUATION OF CERTIFICATION.—The Attorney General shall examine each certification within sixty days after its receipt, and shall approve the certification if the certification demonstrates that the State is in substantial compliance with this Act. If the Attorney General determines that a State program is not substantially in compliance with this Act, the Attorney General shall, within fifteen days after making such determination, notify the Governor of such determination and shall recommend revisions which would bring the State program into compliance with the provisions of this Act.

(c) TERMINATION OF ALLOCATION.—If, within thirty months after the date of enactment of this Act, a State has not submitted a certification described in subsection (a) to the Attorney General, or if a State has submitted a certification described in such subsection to the Attorney General and such certification has not been approved by the Attorney General, the Attorney General shall notify the Governor of the State that the State's allocation under section 9(d) shall be terminated unless, within six months after the Attorney General transmits such notice, the State submits a certification described in subsection (a) to the Attorney General and the Attorney General approves such certification.

(d) ACTION IN THE EVENT OF NONCERTIFICATION.—If, within four years after the date of enactment of this Act, a State program of one or more States has not been approved under subsection (b), the Attorney General shall transmit a report with respect to such State programs to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the President pro tempore of the Senate, and the President of the United States. The report shall include the recommendations of the Attorney General with respect to such State programs.

(e) ACTION IN THE EVENT OF NONCOMPLIANCE.—If the Attorney General determines at any time that a State program which has been approved under subsection (b) no longer complies with this Act, the Attorney General shall notify the Governor of the State of such determination, and that the State shall repay to the United States any amount paid to the State under section 9(a) which has not been used by the State prior to the date on which the State receives notice of the Attorney General's determination. The State shall make such repayment within sixty days after receiving such notice.

SEC. 9. PAYMENTS TO STATES WITH COMPLYING PROGRAMS.

(a) PAYMENTS BY ATTORNEY GENERAL.—Within ninety days after approving a certification of a State under section 8(b), the Attorney General shall pay to that State the amount specified in subsection (d). Payment shall be made in a single installment to the State officer, agency, or organization authorized by State law to receive such payment.

(b) USE OF PAYMENTS.—Payments made under subsection (a) shall be used by the State to support and pay the costs of establishing and operating one or more malpractice screening panels under section 5 and to reimburse the State for the costs of developing and submitting the State program. Any amount of a payment made under subsection (a) which is not used in accordance with the preceding sentence may be used by the State to—

(1) identify the causes of health care malpractice incidents within the State and develop means and programs to prevent or reduce the severity and frequency of avoidable injuries to patients;

(2) review the structure, authority, and operations of approved State malpractice claims plans, risk-management committees, professional standards review organizations, professional licensing bodies, and professional conduct bodies for licensed or certified health care professionals and industries, and develop or implement needed improvements in such plans, committees, organizations, and bodies; and

(3) develop or offer courses or materials relating to—

(A) recognized standards for the safe and approved practice of any licensed or certified health care profession or industry within the State; and

(B) means by which the risks of avoidable injury to patients may be reduced and the standards of health care practice improved.

(c) REPORT OF GOVERNOR.—Within one year after the date on which a State receives a payment under subsection (a), the Governor of the State shall report to the Attorney General on the State's use of such payment. Upon request, the Governor of any such State shall provide the Attorney General with the description of any State activity carried out under subsection (b).

(d) AMOUNT OF PAYMENTS.—The Attorney General shall allocate among the States the amounts appropriated to make payments under this section as follows:

(1) The Attorney General shall allocate $250,000 from the amounts appropriated to carry out this Act to each State, except that if—

(A) the amount appropriated to carry out this Act is less than $12,500,000, the Attorney General shall proportionately reduce the amount allocated to each State; and

(B) if the amount appropriated to carry out this Act exceeds $12,500,000, the Attorney General shall allocate to each State, from the amount which equals the difference between the amount appropriated to carry out this Act and $12,500,000, an amount which bears the same ratio to the total amount of such difference as the population of the State bears to the population of all States.

(2) If, under section 8(c), a State's allocation under this Act is terminated, or if, under section 8(e), a State is required to repay to the United States any amount, the amount of such terminated allocation or repayment shall be reallocated by the Attorney General in accordance with paragraph (3).

(3) Except as provided in paragraph (4), amounts which are subject to reallocation pursuant to paragraph (2) shall be reallocated and paid to States which the Attorney General determines, in the Attorney General's discretion, are most in need of additional funds to support the State program. In reallocating amounts under this paragraph, the Attorney General shall consider all relevant circumstances, including—

(A) a high incidence of malpractice claims within a State;

(B) unique or unusual types of claims requiring exceptional expense to a State;

(C) long distances or other geographical barriers within a State which increase travel and administrative costs for the State program;

(D) particular claims in a State involving unusual problems of proof or presenting new issues of scientific fact or professional standards;

(E) particular claims or patterns of claims in a State involving similar or related injuries to a large number of persons similarly situated; and

(F) special litigation or management needs which occur in a State in order to comply with existing State law or State constitutional requirements.

(4) Amounts subject to reallocation pursuant to paragraph (2) may also be allocated and paid by the Attorney General to any State for the purpose of assisting in the development or implementation of a modified State program, or for studies of the operations of the State program. The results of any such study shall be reported to the Attorney General.

SEC. 10. JUDICIAL REVIEW.

Any decision by the Attorney General—

(1) that a State program is not in compliance with this Act,

(2) to terminate the allocation of a State under this Act,

(3) to require a State to repay funds provided under this Act, or

(4) to reallocate funds under this Act, shall be final and not subject to judicial review.

SEC. 11. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

There are authorized to be appropriated to the Department of Justice $25,000,000 for fiscal year 1986 and each succeeding fiscal year to carry out the purposes of this Act. Funds appropriated to carry out this Act for a fiscal year shall remain available until expended.

By Mr. PROXMIRE:

S. 176. A bill to require a charge for meals furnished to certain high-level Government officers and employees in the executive branch and for meals furnished in Senate dining facilities; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

THE NO FREE LUNCH ACT

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, I am reintroducing legislation to require that dining rooms used by Government executives, and those run by the Senate, be operated on a pay as you go basis. The Senate passed this bill last year but it died in a conference committee. I urge my colleagues to pass this bill once again.

Some might ask why should we deal with this bill? It would save the taxpayers about $2.4 million a year, a drop in the bucket when compared to $200 billion deficits.

The answer to that question, Mr. President, comes in three parts. First as we try to reduce those staggering deficits, we are going to be reducing programs which benefit millions of middle and lower income Americans. As a simple matter of fairness, benefits going to Government executives should not be exempt from the budget knife. Second, the numbers we throw around are all but incomprehensible to most Americans. How much is $200 billion? More than my mortgage but less than the national debt is how most people would answer that question. But everyone can understand what it means to pay $5 for a steak dinner which cost $20 to serve. Finally, my bill would encourage efficiency, always a desirable goal. Cost would become an important consideration in the operation of Senate and executive dining rooms.

The facts which prompted me to prepare this bill are straightforward. In 1981, Government agencies operated 22 exclusive dining rooms, used by those at the GS-15 pay level or above. These officials are paid $50,000-70,000 a year.

The taxpayers paid about $2,400,000 to operate these dining rooms, while the highly-paid executives chipped-in about $500,000. Put another way, the taxpayers are paying 82 cents out of every $1 spent to operate these dining rooms.

This legislation requires that the price of meals served be set at a level sufficient to pay for the costs of food, direct labor charges, utilities, and depreciation of equipment. Government restaurants would still have two breaks: rent and overhead costs are excluded from the pay as you go requirement. I excluded these costs because these restaurants serve little or no alcohol, while private restaurants derive a large share of theie profits from the sale of drinks. This exclusion is a rough trade-off: little or no revenue from the sale of alcohol in exchange for no direct charge for rent or overhead costs.

This bill also applies to the Senate, whose dining rooms are a $5 million a year operation. Our restaurants are now expected to break even by policy and this legislation would write that policy into law.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill I am reintroducing be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "No Free Lunch Act of 1985".

SEC. 2. For the purposes of this Act, "executive dining room" means any dining room which is located in an office building used by any agency in the executive branch and where breakfast, lunch, or dinner is available only to an officer or employee of the Government serving in a position in the executive branch in grade GS-15 or above, Executive Level V or above, or colonel or above, or their guests or was available only to such officers or employees or their guests before the date of enactment of this Act.

SEC. 3. Each person receiving a meal in an executive dining room or in a Senate dining facility shall be charged for such meal a price in an amount which is not less than an amount sufficient to defray the cost of providing such meal considering the cost of food, labor, and utilities, and the depreciation of equipment used in providing such meal.

SEC. 4. Sums collected pursuant to section 3 shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts.

By Mr. HART (for himself, Mr. PELL, Mr. SIMON, Mr. RIEGLE, Mr. ANDREWS, Mr. STENNIS, and Mr. MOYNIHAN):

S. 177. A bill to authorize a national program of improving the quality of education; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

AMERICAN DEFENSE EDUCATION ACT

Mr. HART. Mr. President, today, on behalf, of myself and Senators PELL, SIMON, RIEGLE, ANDREWS, STENNIS, and MOYNIHAN, I am introducing the American Defense Education Act.

Responsibility for our children's education is a shared responsibility. It rests on families, on communities, and on governments. The American Defense Education Act draws on all three to meet the challenge of educating our children at a time when our Nation's educational, economic, technological, and defense needs are greater than at any other period in history.

Almost 2 years ago the President's Commission on Excellence in Education released its report, "A Nation At Risk," detailing the state of education in the mid-1980's. That report told of the "rising tide of mediocrity that threatens our very future as a people and a nation." To educators who work in our schools every day—as well as businessmen and businesswomen who employ the students graduated from our high schools and colleges—the Commission's findings came as a long-awaited national awakening to the urgent needs of our public schools.

There is no question that our schools are in crisis. Average achievement test scores today are lower than they were in 1957, the year the Soviets launched Sputnik and America initiated a furious race to "catch up with the Russians" in science, technology, and space exploration.

Today, only 13 percent of all high school graduates are prepared for the engineering curriculum in college, compared with 28 percent in 1972.

One-half of all high school students in the United States take no math or science beyond the 10th grade. What is most dangerous is that our toughest international competitors are devoting far more attention to educating their children in these vital areas. Soviet students must complete 2 years of calculus, 5 years of physics, 4 years of chemistry, 4 years of biology, and 5 years of algebra by the time they complete high school.

Unfortunately, our national inattention to science and mathematics is matched by a perilous decline in the number of qualified teachers in these areas. Few new teachers are going into these areas, and many present science and math teachers are leaving for better pay and opportunities outside teaching. According to a recent survey of the National Science Teachers Association, 50 percent of all schoolteachers now teaching mathematics and science nationwide are not certified to do so. Qualified mathematics high school teachers can double their salaries as computer programmers—and they do. In my own State of Colorado, the projected shortage of mathematics teachers for 1985 is 606. That figure rises to 1,570 for the year 2000 according to the Colorado Department of Education.

Mr. President, these statistics are alarming and could be devastating for our country's future.

The American economy is undergoing a profound transformation—as far reaching and pervasive as the industrial revolution. America is fast becoming a Nation of workers with words and information. It is in our country's best interest to invest in the minds of our young people. The opportunities for jobs, for growth, for prosperity in the 1980's and 1990's depend on our human resources even more than our physical resources. Our future security and well-being depend on investing in the education of tomorrow's workers.

The past 20 years have brought unparalleled scientific and technical advances. Our society has been transformed by computers, by communications, by electronics, and it will continue to change in the decades ahead. Unless we begin to prepare our children in mathematics, science, foreign languages, communication skills, and technology, they will not be able to compete in the international marketplace. And our economic future will be jeopardized.

Technological and scientific knowledge is necessary to meet our economic objectives. It is even more imperative to meet our national security objectives.

Today's defense rests on sophisticated equipment. This equipment incorporates the most up-to-date science and technology. And what of the minds to control the equipment, to operate it, and maintain it? The ADEA directs the Secretary of Defense to work with the Department of Education and teachers to project the educational and personnel development needs of the Armed Forces.

Mr. President, the current education crisis demands an immediate national response and the American Defense Education Act provides it.

The ADEA provides that local education agencies develop and implement programs in elementary and secondary schools to improve instruction and student achievement in mathematics, science, communication skills, foreign languages, and technology. The bill establishes participation requirements and an assessment of instruction and student achievement. To measure the progress of programs developed with ADEA assistance, local school districts are to establish yearly evaluation systems. These systems would be developed with participation from the school board, administrators, teachers, parents, and industry.

During each fiscal year, school districts working with the ADEA program will be entitled to a basic payment of 2 percent of the average per-pupil expenditure in the State—but not less than the average per-pupil expenditure for the United States. Those districts which can show substantial evidence that the programs meet ADEA goals for the year will receive an additional 2-percent payment.

The ADEA also provides for grant programs at institutions of higher education to establish a coordinated effort between local education agencies and higher education to facilitate the improvement of mathematics and science education. Grant proposals will be evaluated by practitioners from the elementary, secondary, and postsecondary education communities. Proposals could include but not be limited to summer institutes, workshops, and in-service education conducted by higher education institutions to provide practicing teachers up-to-date mathematics and science instruction.

The bill also establishes a program to support research and development in effective education in mathematics, science, foreign languages, and technological training. Research on teaching and learning techniques in these areas will prove invaluable.

An additional component of the ADEA calls for the Secretary of Defense to project the personnel training needs of the Armed Forces. Then, in conjunction with the Secretary of Education and local educators, the Secretary will analyze the best way for education to help meet those needs. It is absolutely essential for our defense professionals to communicate with our educators.

Mr. President, the American Defense Education Act establishes an incentive program, a Federal impetus, so our country can meet the demands placed on our educational systems by the technological changes taking place in today's world. The key here is "Federal impetus." The ADEA provides localities with necessary Federal aid without stifling local initiative or flexibility. It is vital to our economic well-being and to our national security that the Federal Government provide the support to local school districts to develop the program which will train our young people for tomorrow's world.

I ask unanimous consent that the full text of the bill appear in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 177

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That, this Act may be cited as the "American Defense Education Act".

FINDINGS AND PURPOSES

SEC. 2. (a) The Congress finds that—

(1) it is in the national interest that local systems of elementary and secondary education, under local control, be maintained and operated in all of the States which provide a high quality of education and which strive toward excellence in achievement by all students;

(2) even though the States and local communities have, and should retain, control over, and primary responsibility for, elementary and secondary education, the Federal Government has an interest in providing assistance to local educational agencies for programs which are important to our national defense and our national economy; and

(3) in order to increase the productivity of the Nation's economy and ensure an adequate number of high school graduates qualified to serve in the Nation's defense, it is necessary to improve the quality of instruction and levels of achievement in mathematics, the sciences, foreign languages, communication skills, and technology.

(b) It is therefore the purpose of this Act—

(1) to authorize a national program of incentives which would assist local educational agencies in improving the quality of instruction in the schools of the United States in the fields of mathematics, the sciences, the communication skills, foreign languages, and technology.

(2) to provide that all local educational agencies be eligible to participate in that program;

(3) to provide that, in carrying out this program, the policies of the United States regarding equality of educational opportunity be reaffirmed and renewed; and

(4) to provide for a sustained program of research in order to develop knowledge and information resources on the improvement of teaching and learning in mathematics, the sciences, foreign languages, communications, and technology.

TITLE I—ELEMENTARY AND SECONDARY EDUCATION PROGRAMS LOCAL PROGRAMS TO IMPROVE EDUCATION

SEC. 101. (a) Any local educational agency in any State which desires to participate in the national program to improve education shall develop and carry out a program for the improvement of instruction and student achievement. Such program shall include—

(1) an assessment of instruction and student achievement in the school district of such agency; and

(2) specific plans for improving instruction and achievement in mathematics, the sciences, the communication skills, foreign languages, and technology.

(b) Each local educational agency which develops a local program pursuant to subsection (a) shall—

(1) as part of the assessment carried out pursuant to clause (1) of subsection (a), determine specific educational problems in the school district of such agency and develop a means of addressing those problems through expanded, improved, or new educational methods or practices;

(2) establish local, specific, objectively measurable goals which are to be achieved through the program developed pursuant to subsection (a) and establish or select a local procudure for measuring, at least annually, the extent to which such goals are being achieved;

(3) develop such programs through a procudure which involves the active public participation of the administrators, teachers, parents, business and industry, and representatives from the community as a whole;

(4) provide for inservice training of teachers as a means of improving the quality of instruction; and

(5) make available to the public a written statement which describes—

(A) the assessment carried out pursuant to clause (1) of subsection (a),

(B) the educational problems determined pursuant to clause (1) of this subsection,

(C) the overall program developed and carried out under this section, and

(D) the goals and procedures required by clauses (2) and (3) of this subsection.

PAYMENTS

SEC. 102. (a) Each local educational agency which establishes a program to improve education under section 101 shall be eligible for a basic payment for each fiscal year during which it conducts such program. The amount of such basic payment shall be equal to 2 per centum of the payment rate established under subsection (c), multiplied by the number of children in average daily attendance in the school district of the local educational agency.

(b) Each local educational agency which conducts a program to improve education under section 101 during any fiscal year and demonstrates that the program substantially achieves the goals established for such year pursuant to clause (2) of section 101(b) shall, in addition to the payment for which it is eligible under subsection (a) for the succeeding fiscal year, be eligible for an incentive payment equal to 2 per centum of the payment rate established under subsection (c) for such succeeding fiscal year, multipiled by the number of children in average daily attendance in the school district of the local educational agency.

(c)(1) The payment rate for any local educational agency in any State for any fiscal year shall be equal to the average per pupil expenditure for that State, except that the payment rate for any local educational agency shall not be less than the average per pupil expenditure in the United States.

(2) For the purposes of paragraph (1), the term "average per pupil expenditure" in a State, or in the United States, shall be the aggregate current expenditures, during the second fiscal year preceding the fiscal year for which the computation is made (or if satisfactory data for that year are not available at the time of computation, then during the most recent preceding fiscal year for which satisfactory data are available), of all local educational agencies in the State, or in the United States (which for the purposes of this subsection means the fifty States, and the District of Columbia), as the case may be, plus any direct current expenditures by the State for operation of such agencies (without regard to the source of funds from which either of such expenditures are made), divided by the aggregate number of children in average daily attendance to whom such agencies provided free public education during such preceding year.

(3) For the purposes of paragraph (2), the term "current expenditures" means expenditures for free public education, including expenditures for administration, instruction, attendance and health services, pupil transportation services, operation and maintenance of plant, fixed charges, and net expenditures to cover deficits for food services and student body activities, but not including expenditures for community services, capital outlay, and debt service.

(d)(1) Notwithstanding any other provision of this section, the amount which may be appropriated for a fiscal year for payments under this section may not exceed the product of—

(A) the total number of children in average daily attendance in the schools of all the local educational agencies in the States, multiplied by

(B)(i) $50 for fiscal year 1987, or

(ii) $100 for each of the two succeeding fiscal years.

(2) If the total amount appropriated in accordance with paragraph (1) is less than the sum of the amounts for which all local educational agencies are eligible under this section, the amount paid to each local educational agency shall be ratably reduced to the extent necessary to bring such payments within the limits of the amount so appropriated. If additional funds become available for making payments under this section for that year, such reduced amounts shall be increased on the same basis that they were reduced.

APPLICATIONS FOR PAYMENTS

SEC. 103. (a) Each local educational agency which desires to receive the payment for which it is eligible for any fiscal year under section 102(a) shall notify the Secretary of its intention to establish a program under section 101 and, at such time and in such form and manner as the Secretary may require, submit an application therefor. Such application shall contain assurances that—

(1) the local educational agency has developed and is carrying out a local program meeting the requirements of section 101;

(2) the local educational agency will maintain a level of per pupil expenditures during that fiscal year which is at least equal to that maintained during the preceding fiscal year;

(3) adequate procedures for public participation in the development of the local program have been established and used and that such procedures include provisions for filing complaints concerning the operation of the local program and the resolution of problems arising from such complaints.

(4) the local educational agency has established a local program of inservice training for teachers in the schools of such agency, which program shall provide an adequate level of training for all teachers in need thereof and shall be operated under that supervision of the teachers in such schools; and

(5) the local educational agency will not engage in any conduct in violation of section 901 of the Education Amendments of 1972, section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973, section 302 of the Age Discrimination Act of 1975, or section 601 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, as any of such sections may be amended from time to time.

(b) Each local educational agency which desires to receive the payments for which it is eligible for any fiscal year under section 102(b) shall include in its application under subsection (a) for the succeeding year such evidence as may be necessary to show that it has met the requirements of section 102(b) for that year.

(c) The Secretary shall approve each application submitted for any fiscal year which meets the requirements of subsection (a) or subsection (b), as the case may be.

TITLE II—TEACHER TRAINING AND POSTSECONDARY PROGRAMS

TEACHER TRAINING INITIATIVES

SEC. 201. (a) The Secretary is authorized to establish a program of grants to institutions of higher education for the purpose of encouraging coordination between such institutions and local educational agencies in the improvement of science and mathematic education. No grant to any such institution for any fiscal year shall exceed $200,000. In making such grants, the Secretary shall ensure an equitable geographic distribution of the funds available therefor. Proposals for such grants shall be evaluated through a peer review process, including practitioners from the elementary, secondary, and postsecondary education communities. Such proposals shall be developed by the recipient institution in collaboration with one or more public schools or school districts and other appropriate agencies or councils.

(b) In making grants under this section, the Secretary shall give priority to those proposals which include any of the following activities:

(1) Summer institutes and workshops and a parallel program of in-service education, conducted by higher education institutions to provide practicing teachers and supervisors with up-to-date science and mathematics information and pedagogical concepts;

(2) Projects to enhance the capacity of institutions of higher education to meet the professional needs of both new and practicing teachers, including faculty development activities; and

(3) Support for exemplary State, local, and institutional efforts to attract, retain, and motivate teachers to pursue careers in precollege mathematics and science education, as well as identification of exemplary teacher training projects, and the dissemination of information about these projects.

(c) For the purposes of this section, the term "institution of higher education" has the meaning given such term by section 1201(a) of the Higher Education Act of 1965.

(d) There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out this section $25,000,000 for fiscal year 1987, $30,000,000 for fiscal year 1988, and $20,000,000 for fiscal year 1989.

TITLE III—RESEARCH TO IMPROVE INSTRUCTION

EDUCATIONAL RESEARCH PROGRAM

SEC. 301. (a) The Secretary shall administer through the National Institute of Education, in consultation with appropriate Federal agencies, a program to support research and development into effective education in mathematics, the sciences, foreign languages, and technology. Research projects and programs supported by this section shall include one or more of the following:

(1) research on teaching and learning in mathematics, science, foreign languages, and the instructional uses of information technologies;

(2) the application of such research to the improvement of instructional materials and teacher training programs;

(3) research on the effects of secondary school organization and operation on student learning in mathematics, science, foreign languages, and technology;

(4) student achievement in advanced academic skills needed for work and further learning, including computer and technological literacy; and

(5) analysis of local and institutional policies enhancing or inhibiting the recruitment, retention, and instructional improvement in mathematics and science teachers.

(b) There are authorized to be appropriated in the Department of Education and made available to the National Institute of Education to carry out this section $15,000,000 for fiscal year 1987, $20,000,000 for fiscal year 1988, and $25,000,000 for fiscal year 1989.

TITLE IV—GENERAL PROVISIONS

ADMINISTRATION

SEC. 401. (a) The Secretary of Education shall be responsible for the administration of the program authorized by this Act.

(b) The Secretary shall pay to each local educational agency which has an application approved under section 103 for any fiscal year the amount for which that agency is eligible for that fiscal year.

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 402. For the purposes of this Act—

(1) the term "local educational agency" means a public board of education or other public authority legally constituted within a State for either administrative control or direction of, or to perform a service function for, public, elementary or secondary schools in a city, county, township, school district, or other political subdivision of a State, or such combination of school districts or counties as are recognized in a State as an administrative agency for its public elementary and secondary schools;

(2) the term "State" means a State, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, Guam, American Samoa, the Northern Marianas, the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, or the Virgin Islands; and

(3) the term "Secretary" means the Secretary of Education.

JOINT SURVEY AND REPORT BY THE SECRETARIES OF DEFENSE AND EDUCATION

SEC. 403. (a) The Secretary of Education shall conduct a survey of the levels of academic achievement of eighteen-year-old persons in the United States each year beginning in 1987 and continuing for the succeeding three years in order to determine the extent to which the need for qualified personnel in the armed services can be satisfied without remedial education. Furthermore, the Secretary of Defense shall conduct a study projecting the personnel training needs of the Armed Forces for the next four years. The Secretary of Education shall prepare in conjunction with the Secretary of Defense and local educational agencies an analysis of educational needs of the Department of Defense to assist in efficient personnel development.

(b) Not later than October 1 of each year during which the surveys are being conducted pursuant to subsection (a), the Secretary of Defense and the Secretary of Education shall submit a joint report of their findings from such survey to the Congress. Such report shall include—

(1) a statement of findings by the two Secretaries with respect to the results of such survey;

(2) an estimate of the number of persons surveyed who qualify for entry into the armed services without remedial education and the number who do not qualify by reason of failure in academic achievement;

(3) a statement regarding the extent to which the estimated number of qualified persons meets the estimated personnel needs of the armed services; and

(4) recommendations for improving the quality of instruction in secondary schools with a view toward raising levels of academic achievement among eighteen-year-old persons.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I rise today in strong support of and as enthusiastic cosponsor of The American Defense Education Act of 1985 and urge my colleagues in the Senate to join Senator Hart and the other cosponsors of this bill in bringing about its early consideration in this Congress.

This legislation represents one of the single most important contributions the Federal Government can make to improving the plight of public education in the United States. Since the release of "A Nation At Risk" almost 2 years ago, education has returned to the front burner as an issue in the Congress, in statehouses and the State legislatures around the country, and in school boards where educational policy is and should be made. While great progress has been made in the past 18 months—due primarily to State and local efforts undertaken before we were told of the "* * * rising tide of mediocrity" facing public education—there is much still to be done. While money is not the answer, additional revenues must be provided if we are to achieve excellence and equity in our public schools.

The American Defense Education Act is not the whole solution, but it represents a beginning by providing Federal leadership and some resources to assist local school districts address the many problems they face in improving instruction and curriculum, strengthening promotion and graduation requirements, addressing the learning and language difficulties of many students when they enter school, and restoring the proper learning environment and the status of the teaching profession so necessary for solid instruction.

Importantly, this legislation leaves the decisions affecting all of these questions, and others too numerous and technical to enumerate, to local officials—school board members, State and local superintendents, principals, and other administrators, parents, and teachers.

Similar legislation was introduced in the House and Senate last year. The House bill, which was reported by the Committee on Education and Labor on which I served, included provisions to make private elementary and secondary schools eligible for ADEA funding. I support that provision and will work to have it included in this bill at the appropriate time.

As Scholastic Aptitude Tests [SAT's] continue to recover from the depths of a protracted plunge during the last two decades, the Federal Government must add its muscle and money to the task of resolving educational deficiencies facing America and its schoolchildren. Almost every proposal suggested by the Commission on Excellence in Education cost money. Equally sound recommendations have been made by other groups, including The Education Commission of the States, The Twentieth Century Fund, the Carnegie Council for the Advancement of Teaching. There is no cheap or inexpensive option to restoring confidence in our public schools. A poster in my office puts it very well: "It will be a great day when our schools get all the money they need and the air force has to hold a bake sale to buy a bomber." American education is at least as important to our national security as the proper instruction of our young people.

Dennis Doyle and Chester Finn, in a Washington Post article on December 30, 1984, articulated another long-range and promising solution—year-round schooling as an option for all students. This would carry an immense price tag, which I dare say most States could not afford without Federal assistance. With the enactment of ADEA, money would be available to make year-round schooling a really viable option for the States and local school districts. I ask unanimous consent to include the Post article in the RECORD at this point and urge my distinguished colleagues to read it.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Post, Dec. 30, 1984]

HUCK FINN IS DEAD; LONG LIVE YEAR-ROUND SCHOOL

(By Denis P. Doyle and Chester E. Finn Jr.)

Here is a modest proposal for improving the quality of U.S. schools, upgrading the teaching profession and providing some real community support for working parents: Operate the schools year-round. Put them on a four-quarter year, require all youngsters to attend three quarters, and allow them to attend a fourth. Give teachers the option of teaching year-round and make their pay commensurate with the extra time worked.

The present school year is an anachronism. It was designed for a 19th-century, agricultural nation that needed young people to help with crops and did not have air-conditioning to cool school buildings in the hot months.

A longer school year could help school reformers achieve many of their objectives; higher pay for teachers, opportunities for disadvantaged and slow-learning youngsters to catch up, enrichment programs for the gifted, and simplification of the child-care problems encountered by working parents during the long summer holiday.

Granted, the costs of such a change would be considerable, even if it was phased in gradually, and even if the savings from increased operating efficiencies were factored in. But we believe the American public would be willing to pay for it for one simple reason: it would provide dramatic, tangible benefits as opposed to marginal improvements in U.S. education.

First, consider the advantages that a 48-week year would provide to students of all abilities. From an academic standpoint, there is accumulating evidence that a full year of school produces improved learning, particularly in the case of low-income and socially disadvantaged students. Houston, which has tried a year-round program, has found that the achievement scores of students enrolled in it are markedly higher. As a consequence, the Houston school system has expanded the plan to 13 additional schools this year.

Children do not all learn at the same rate; yet those advocating reforms rightly insist that all students should achieve minimum levels of academic competence. If we do not want a high failure rate among children who have difficulty with academics, we will need to provide them with extra time—and extra teaching—to enable them to meet the higher standards.

For the immigrant youngster who needs to know English, extra quarters afford a chance to immerse oneself in language study without subtracting time from arithmetic, geography or science.

THE ULTIMATE FIX: YEAR-ROUND SCHOOL

For the student with learning difficulties, an extra, non-mandatory school quarter could provide time for work on areas of weakness without the stigma of staying back a whole year.

For the gifted child, an added 12-week quarter would be an opportunity for exploring a new subject, getting requirements out of the way or indulging a special interest in computers, poetry or experimental biology. In some years, such a student might take a break, go to camp, travel or earn money.

In eight years of four quarters, a gifted student could cover as much academic ground as he now does in 11 years of 36 weeks of school. A gifted student could graduate from high school in 9 years and have two years to pursue a special interest or earn money for college.

For the average student, the optional fourth quarter could be a time for pursuing interests for which there is insufficient time the rest of the year: driver's education, typing, studio art, or work programs outside school.

In the early grades, the optional fourth quarter of school might be a time for a student to read books of his or her own choice, master basic arithmetic that has been giving trouble or work on a science project. At the high-school level, a 48-week year would allow for much more flexible schedules. The varsity basketball player who cannot handle physics during the winter quarter could take the course in the spring summer or fall quarters.

In some respects, parents would be the principal beneficiaries of a reformed school calendar. As women poured into the workforce in the '60s and '70s, families with two working parents became the rule rather than the exception. This was the genesis of "latchkey" children, who come home to empty houses. Schools have been slow to adjust to this development, which is now a permanent fixture of U.S. society.

For American families, summer is no longer a time of leisurely picnics or putting up tomatoes for winter. Long summer vacations have become a major problem for families that must make child-care arrangements. The wealthy pay for camps, day-care programs or summer schools that charge tuition. But for the less affluent and poor, summer is a time for juggling schedules or allowing children to go unsupervised.

For many children growing up in the '80s, summer has become a time of round-the-clock television watching and unsupervised outdoor play. A 48-week school year would be a boon to many hard-pressed parents and would still leave time for a family vacation.

Public attitudes toward a longer school year are clearly changing. In 1982, the Gallup Poll found just 36 percent favoring the addition of a month to the school calendar; in 1984, 44 prcent did—including a clear majority of big-city residents, college-educated adults, and, inexplicably, Westerners. Although half of all respondents were still opposed, the poll results would likely be quite different if the fourth quarter were described as an option rather than a requirement.

In addition, there are practical reasons for considering the 48-week school year that make good sense given the problems now facing the teaching profession.

Typically, teachers are in school just under three quarters of the year: 36 working weeks, compared with a 48-week working year for most Americans with full-time jobs. To supplement their incomes, about 30 percent of teachers take summer jobs. Eleven percent "moonlight" during the school year, and one in four does extra work for additional pay in the school system—coaching advising student organizations, driving buses. A recent study in New York indicates that one teacher in three holds a second job during the school year, and 53 percent work during the summer. Put another way, teaching is not the sole occupation of many teachers, a fact that has detracted from efforts to make teaching a true profession.

If teachers were paid for a 48-week year at the same rates they are paid today, their salaries would instantly rise by one third, to an average of nearly $30,000 from today's average of $22,000. Even the notoriously low salaries of beginning teachers would rise from today's $11,000-$15,000 to a more respectable $15,000-$20,000.

Not all teachers would welcome additional classroom days, and some would forego extra income to preserve long vacations. But making teaching a full-year vocation could ease the impending problem of a teacher shortage, which is likely to hit the country in two or three years. If all teachers opted to work year-round, while most students continued to attend only three quarters, we would need only three-quarters as many teachers as we employ today. In theory, 1.65 million full-time teachers can do the work of the 2.2 million now employed. Because the nation is expected to need 1 million new teachers in the next six years, more effective utilization of the existing teaching force would be a boon. This would still leave foom for the hiring of young, talented new teachers.

More money for teachers and a chance to upgrade the quality of the teaching profession are not the only potential benefits of running the schools year round. It would be easier for teachers to arrange sabbaticals—simpler for them to take time off to travel or study.

Could school systems handle the intricacies of scheduling and administration? Some already do. More than 90 of the 600 public schools in Los Angeles operate year-round, as a response to what otherwise would be unmanageable overcrowding. A building with a capacity of 1,500 students accommodates 2,000 on a year-round schedule. Even if many students availed themselves of a fourth quarter of school, it would still greatly reduce overcrowding.

At the same time, year-round operation would make much more efficient use of school facilities and staff. Buses and bus drivers could be utilized full time. The extra classroom capacity created by the plan would allow school systems to close old, inefficient or unsafe buildings and temporary facilities.

Also, a 48-week year would bring the U.S. education system more into line with those of our major economic competitors. International education comparisons reveal that young Americans who go to school 180 days a year know much less than their Japanese age-mates, who attend school for 240 days, and less than other industrial democracies with longer school years. Some studies even show American high-school students lagging behind high-school students in developing countries in some areas of achievement.

How many would avail themselves of year-round school? At the outset, perhaps not as many as we might wish.

Many school systems already offer summer school. But attendance tends to be thin. In 1982, for example, less than 4 percent of New York State's students attended summer school, and only one school building in eight was used for this purpose.

When the Los Angeles schools last summer took advantage of additional funds to offer "core academic courses," only 10,000 secondary students turned up, though there were funds available for 27,000. Even the remedial summer school for youngsters who had failed the statewide proficiency test had 7,000 fewer students in 1984 than in 1983.

During the past decade, financial pressures forced many school systems to curtail their summer offerings, often limiting them to seniors who otherwise would not graduate, youngsters with learning problems and those eligible for various federal programs. Chicago enrolled 200,000 children in the summer of 1975, and just 24,000 in 1982. Dade County, Fla., is one of the few urban systems to operate a large-scale summer program—and it receives special state funds for that purpose.

But year-round operation is not the same as adding a slowed-down summer school program. High school students may scoff, preferring to adhere to the familiar pattern. But young working parents with 6- and 8-year-olds in the primary grades would try four quarters. As these children moved up into higher grades, they would increasingly view 48 weeks of school as normal, and the 36-week system of their older brothers and sisters as an odd thing of the past.

Many new teachers would like to boost their salaries by a third, not every year, perhaps, but more often than not.

A number of states have been establishing "career ladders" for teachers, under which senior teachers with added responsibilities would receive significant pay increases. In a year-round school setting, the increases would be even larger for these teachers. In time, teaching will be seen as a decently paid occupation with greater appeal to able young people—and to older people who might be willing to try but cannot imagine why they would move to a part-time classroom post.

Albert Shanker, president of the American Federation of Teachers, says that the "market" should determine teachers' salaries—that math or science teachers should be paid enough to keep them from entering private industry. But teachers must understand that no job market pays a 12-month salary for nine months' work. Teachers who say their work is so draining that it requires weeks of rest and recuperation should try that argument on nurses in intensive care units of hospitals, policemen and coal miners.

There is a parallel message for students and their parents. The National Commission on Excellence in Education, which last year issued a report highly critical of the schools, was right to assert that American youngsters do not spend enough hours on academics. The main substitute for active study has become passive watching of television, and spare-time jobs that pay for more leisure-time entertainment, or just hanging out. The United States has considered year-round schooling in the past. There was a flurry of interest in the idea between 1965 and 1975, when education funds seemed plentiful, facilities were crowded, and the possibility of using school buildings as year-round community resources were in vogue.

An extensive experiment with year-round education was undertaken in Newark, N.J., from 1912 to 1931, when schools were open for 10 months a year for one set of children and for another group, 12 months. The 12-month school program was designed for working-class youngsters and the children of recently arrived immigrants in need of special help.

George Brinkerhoff, an education scholar, reported in the '30s that "The all-year schools graduate a higher percentage of their pupils; they show a lower grade age [because fewer students failed even when standards were maintained]; they have less retardation; they lose fewer pupils before graduating." What is more, he saw no evidence of "brain fatigue," "loss of mental health" or impaired physical development among those attending the 12-month schools.

The Newark program was curbed as a Depression-era economy measure, much as the ambitious summer programs of the early 1970s were cut for financial reasons. But the United States is again pumping resources into its schools, as governors, business leaders and the general public come to recognize the importance of educational excellence. States have been raising taxes to finance better schools, and public-opinion polls indicate that this is acceptable to the electorate—so long as it yields results.

We cannot be certain that a full-fledged experiment of this sort would work in the 1980s. But the potential benefits make it worth trying. At a time when the nation is passionately interested in boosting student achievement, providing better care for the children of working parents and enhancing the appeal of the teaching profession, it makes no sense to allow our schools to stand idle 16 weeks a year.

By Mr. SYMMS (for himself, Mr. STAFFORD, Mr. BENTSEN, Mr.

BURDICK, Mr. CHAFEE, Mr. EVANS, Mr. MITCHELL, and Mr. MOYNIHAN):

S. 178. A bill to approve the interstate and interstate substitute cost estimates, to amend title 23 of the United States Code, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

INTERSTATE HIGHWAY FUNDING ACT OF 1985

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, on behalf of the Environment and Public Works Subcommittee on Transportation, I am pleased to join with the chairman of the Environment and Public Works Committee [Senator STAFFORD] in introducing legislation to approve an Interstate Cost Estimate [ICE] and interstate substitute cost estimate [ISCE] for an 18-month period. With congressional approval, $7 billion can be released and put to work on interstate highway construction and substitute projects throughout the country. These estimates should have been acted on last year, but unfortunately agreement could not be reached with the other body.

In order to avoid such crippling delays in the future, the legislation also contains a provision whereby the Secretary of Transportation would continue to submit the ICE and ISCE to Congress every other January 1, and Congress would continue to have from January to October to review the cost estimates and make any changes it desired. However, if Congress failed to act by October 1, the legislation directs the Secretary to make the necessary adjustments to the ICE and ISCE and then administratively proceed to apportion the funds on October 1. In this way, States would not be penalized and the Federal-Aid Highway Program would not be disrupted, as is happening now.

For the second straight year, States are approaching the spring and summer construction season with no assurance that the funding necessary for planned road and bridge projects will materalize; 40-some States are now completely out of interstate money, and contracts on more than 200 highway projects have had to be shelved. The creation of jobs and other economic benefits are on hold. Problems of highway safety and traffic congestion become more acute by the day. The release of $7 billion will go a long way toward meeting these transportation and other economic needs.

I hope that my colleagues will consider this important legislation carefully and expeditiously. The bill and joint resolution [S.J. Res. 8] being introduced today closely resemble previous efforts: Senate Joint Resolution 312, the "clean" ICE-ISCE, and S. 3024, which the Senate passed 3 months ago. There may be other more feasible legislative approaches but no matter what form the legislation takes, I am convinced the process must be free of controversial policy changes and large, new, special-interest authorizations.

Last year, the Environment and Public Works Committee had many requests for the funding of demonstration projects. A compromise was reached in which the Federal contribution to any specific project was limited to $12.5 million or 50 percent of the project cost, whichever was less. This requirement limited the drain on the Highway Trust Fund and also tended to ensure that such projects were a top priority within the States. The amount for demonstration projects in S. 3024 as passed by the Senate was $178.6 million.

Demonstration projects alone, however, added up to over $600 million in new authorizations in the House-passed bill. According to a recent Federal Highway Administration analysis, the ultimate cost to complete all Senate and House demonstration projects, including language contained in the House-passed bill clarifying eligibility of the central artery and third harbor crossing, potentially could be $7.5 billion. Obviously, such a Federal liability would bankrupt the trust fund in a very short time.

When Senate conferees finally were able to meet with their House counterparts on the ICE-ISCE legislation last year, some Members on the other side of the table believed that the administration would never veto a highway bill. This is not a view I share. OMB Director Stockman and Transportation Secretary Dole repeatedly made clear the administration's position and its willingness to veto legislation that distorts national Highway Program needs, undermines the financial integrity of the trust fund, and contributes to an even greater national budget deficit.

In January 1983, the landmark Surface Transportation Assistance Act [STAA] was enacted, and, as of fiscal 1983, States began receiving a 50-percent increase in Federal assistance for vitally needed construction and repair work on our Nation's highway system. Highway user fees were increased to finance that spending. The STAA, with authorizations running through fiscal 1986, should continue to be implemented without any major changes in law and without large numbers of new specific project authorizations. I urge my colleagues to focus for now on the pressing need all States share for release of $7 billion in interstate funding.

Mr. President, I appreciate the combined efforts of the distinguished Senator from Vermont [Mr. STAFFORD], the chairman of the committee, and the distinguished Senator from Texas [Mr. BENTSEN], who served so ably as ranking minority member of the Transportation Subcommittee and with the 99th Congress will become the ranking minority member of the committee. Approval of the ICE and ISCE is truly a bipartisan and national concern. I hope that the legislation will be considered early and favorably, so that States can proceed in administering the very vital Federal-Aid Highway Program.

S. 179. A bill to eliminate the requirement that eight members of the District of Columbia Commission on Mental Health shall be physicians; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

D.C. COMMISSION ON MENTAL HEALTH MEMBERSHIP

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation which would modify the current statutory requirement that all members of the District of Columbia Commission on Mental Health be physicians.

My proposal would provide greater administrative flexibility and ensure that qualified professionals representing each of the traditional mental health disciplines would be eligible for appointment. This is in line with the evolving changes within our Nation's mental health programs.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 179

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 502(a) of title 21 of the District of Columbia Code is amended by striking out the last sentence and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "Eight members of the Commission shall be mental-health professionals practicing in the District of Columbia who have had not less than five years' experience in the treatment of mental illnesses.".

By Mr. INOUYE:

S. 180. A bill to amend title 10, United States Code, to eliminate the restrictions on the types of medical care that the uniformed services may provide, directly or by contract, to dependents of members of the uniformed services; to the Committee on Armed Services.

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation which would amend the basic authorization statute of the Civilian Health and Medical Program of the Uniformed Services [CHAMPUS] in order to remove all present legislative restrictions on the type of health benefit package which the Department of Defense may wish to provide to eligible beneficiaries.

For financial reasons, it currently is not possible for the Department of Defense to provide every CHAMPUS beneficiary with a totally comprehensive health care benefit. However, I strongly feel that we should provide the Department with maximum possible administrative flexibility so that CHAMPUS can continuously modify its program in order to respond to either changing demands of the beneficiary population or changes in the way that health care is delivered across the Nation. If my proposal is enacted into public law, the Department will still have to live within its budgetary constraints; however, I would fully expect that over time we will see a number of new and important health care initiatives being made available to CHAMPUS beneficiaries.

Mr. President, it is time that the Congress of the United States, ensure that the health care benefits available to CHAMPUS beneficiaries will no longer differ drastically merely because the beneficiary may not live geographically near a military facility.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of this bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

"(2) died while on such duty, is entitled, upon request, to medical and dental care in facilities of the uniformed services, subject to the availability of space and facilities and the capabilities of the medical and dental staff.".

(b) Subsection (b) of such section is amended by striking out "the medical and dental care prescribed by section 1077 of this title" and inserting in lieu thereof "medical and dental care".

SEC. 2. Section 1077 of title 10, United States Code, is amended—

(1) in subsection (a)—

S. 181. A bill to permit educational institutions with graduate programs in psychology to apply for grants and contracts to provide educational assistance to individuals from disadvantaged backgrounds; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation to amend the Health Careers Opportunity Program [HCOP] in order to allow minority students to pursue careers in psychology under this initiative if they so desire.

This bill which I am offering today was adopted by the conferees during their deliberations on the Health Manpower Reauthorization Act last Congress, which was, unfortunately, vetoed.

(b) Such section is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(3) For purposes of this section, the term 'graduate program in psychology' means a graduate program in a public or nonprofit private institution in a State which—

"(A) provides training leading to a doctoral degree in psychology or an equivalent degree;

"(B) prepares the individual receiving such degree for licensure by a State as a psychologist; and

"(C) is accredited in the manner described in section 701 (5).".

S. 182. A bill to authorize the Secretary of Health and Human Services to make grants for the planning, development, establishment, and operation of poison control centers; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

POISON CONTROL CENTERS

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation to authorize the Secretary of the Department of Health and Human Services to make grants for planning and operating poison control centers.

I understand that more than 5 million poisonings occur each year in our Nation and that poisoning continues to remain the fourth most frequent cause of accidental death after motor vehicle accidents, drownings, and burns. Poisonings result in approximately 12,000 deaths per year. Unfortunately, about 90 percent of the reported cases involve children, thereby making poisonings the most common pediatric emergency.

Presently, there are nearly 500 poison control or poison information centers already established in our Nation, many of which are colocated with hospital facilities, universities or public health authorities. Some of these are presently receiving Federal funding under the provisions of the Emergency Medical Services Block Grant Program. I understand that in the areas of high military concentration, such as Hawaii, military families can make up a high proportion of their clientele. In fact, in Honolulu, approximately 25 percent of our poison center's transactions are for local military personnel and their dependents, whom I might add often do not pay local taxes.

Mr. President, previous studies which have been brought to my attention conclusively indicate that when all poisoning episodes are considered, regional poison centers have been found to significantly reduce pediatric visits to hospital emergency rooms. For example, one study indicated that of those parents who did not call the poison center, 44 percent went to an emergency room, whereas less that 1 percent of the parents who did call the center went to the hospital. Essentially, various scientific and medical experts have informed me that a well-staffed poison center can effectively manage 85 percent of the acute poisonings which occur over the telephone. Simply stated, by spending money up front to establish poison centers, we will in the long run save considerable funds in hospital expenses. In fact, I understand that approximately 600,000 hospital visits or admissions are attributed to poisonings annually.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 182

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That part B of title III of the Public Health Service Act is amended by inserting after section 315 the following new section:

"POISON CONTROL CENTERS

"SEC. 361. (a) The Secretary may make grants to appropriate public and private nonprofit entities for the planning, development, establishment, and operation of poison control centers.

"(b) A poison control center planned, developed, established, or operated with a grant under this section shall, with respect to the locality in which such center is established—

"(1) provide services for the appropriate and expeditious management and treatment of individuals who have consumed poisons or an overdose of drugs;

"(2) establish a twenty-four hour telephone line, at no charge to the caller, to—

"(A) answer requests for information concerning poisons and drugs;

"(B) receive requests concerning, and make recommendations for, the treatment in the home of individuals who have consumed poisons or an overdose of drugs;

"(C) coordinate the referral to hospital emergency rooms of individuals who have consumed poisons or an overdose of drugs who need such referrals, by contacting and providing appropriate information to the staffs of such emergency rooms;

"(D) provide information to health care professionals involved in the treatment of individuals who have consumed poisons or an overdose of drugs; and

"(E) monitor the treatment at home of individuals who have consumed poisons or an overdose of drugs in order to assure that adequate care is provided to such individuals;

"(3) create and implement education programs in order to improve public awareness of problems relating to the consumption of poisons and drugs and methods to prevent such consumption; and

"(4) collect data relating to the operations of the center, including information concerning the individuals served by such center.

"(c) To carry out this section, there are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary."

By Mr. INOUYE:

S. 183. A bill to direct the Secretary of the Army to determine the validity of the claims of certain Filipinos who assert that they performed military service on behalf of the United States during World War II, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Armed Services.

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, today I am reintroducing a bill to direct the Secretary of the Army to determine the validity of the claims of certain Filipinos who assert that they performed military service on behalf of the United States during World War II, and for other purposes.

During the course of World War II many Filipinos—guerrillas, and active servicemen—fought on behalf of U.S. interests. In 1948 the U.S. Government struck from official U.S. Army records the names of thousands of Filipinos who served during this time, denying these individuals the rights, benefits, and privileges they so richly deserve.

The legislation I am proposing today would permit these excluded veterans to submit their claims to the proper authorities for reevaluation—resolution—on a case-by-case basis. Upon submission of sufficient documentation of service with the U.S. Army or organized guerrilla forces, these individuals should be duly recognized as veterans and entitled to benefits and assistance from the U.S. Government.

The removal of their names from official Army records was an injustice to these individuals who helped the United States during World War II. For some, this bill is too late since death has taken its toll. However, the enactment of this legislation would confirm our commitment to these Filipinos who fought so hard to maintain U.S. freedom.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of this bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 183

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

That (a) any person who claims to have performed military service with or for the United States Army in the Philippine Islands during World War II and is not recognized, for any purpose, as having performed active service in or on behalf of the Armed Forces of the United States may file an application, in such form as the Secretary of the Army (hereinafter in this Act referred to as the "Secretary") shall prescribe, to have the Secretary determine, on the basis of all information and evidence presented to him by such person and on the basis of all other information and evidence available to the Secretary, whether such person should be considered as having performed active service in or for the Armed Forces of the United States.

(b) If the Secretary determines, in the case of any person who files an application under this Act, that such person—

(1) served in the organized military forces of the Government of the Commonwealth of the Philippines while such forces were in the service of the Armed Forces of the United States, including among such military forces organized guerrilla forces under commanders appointed, designated, or subsequently recognized by the Commander in Chief, Southwest Pacific Area, or other competent authority in the Army of the United States;

(2) was awarded the Purple Heart or other medal or decoration of the Armed Forces of the United States in connection with the performance of military service on behalf of the Armed Forces of the United States; or

(3) was inducted into the United States Armed Forces in the Far East (USAFFE) before the outbreak of World War II, performed military service for or on behalf of the United States in the Philippine Islands during World War II, reported to United States military control during the liberation of the Philippine Islands, and subsequently, without his consent, had his name and records erroneously deleted or otherwise erroneously removed from the official records of the Armed Forces of the United States;

the Secretary shall issue to such person an appropriate certificate of service which shall entitle such person to the same rights and benefits under the laws of the United States as other persons who performed substantially the same type of military service in the Philippine Islands during World War II and who, on the day before the date of enactment of this Act, were entitled to such rights and benefits by virtue of such service.

SEC. 2. No person shall be eligible for a certificate of service under this Act if the Secretary determines that such person was discharged from military service described in subsection (b) of the first section under conditions other than honorable.

SEC. 3. As used in this Act the term "World War II" means the period beginning on December 7, 1941, and ending on December 31, 1946.

SEC. 4. The Secretary may not consider any application received more than two years after the date of enactment of this Act.

SEC. 5. The Secretary shall issue such regulations as he deems necessary and appropriate to carry out effectively and equitably the provisions of this Act.

SEC. 6. No benefits shall accrue to any person for any period prior to the date of enactment of this Act as a result of the enactment of this Act.

By Mr. INOUYE:

S. 184. A bill to authorize reduced postage rates for certain mail matter sent to Members of Congress; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, I rise today to reintroduce a bill to provide for the issuance of a special 1 cent postage stamp to be used for correspondence with Members of Congress.

Mr. President, ours is a democratic government—a representative government—and thus, by definition, one dependent on the continuing operation of a two-way communication system between the people of this country and their elected Representatives.

Each Member of the Congress is directly responsible to those people in his State or district whom he represents. He must not only keep communication channels open but, more importantly, he must be responsive to the concerns he receives through these channels. The most practical means of transmitting these constituent concerns is through the mail. It is most difficult for many of us to imagine ourselves in a situation where the desire to express an opinion is frustrated because we must think twice about spending money on a postage stamp. Unfortunately, we must face the fact that many of our Nation's citizens are forced to consider the purchase of a 20-cent postage stamp for the purpose of expressing a grievence, or opinion or idea, as something beyond their means.

The issuance of a 1-cent stamp for this purpose would effectively remove this prohibition and allow all citizens to apprise their Representatives and Senators of their individual throughts and position on the issues facing our Nation. This measure would amend the Postal Reform Act of 1970 to provide for the issurance of these 1 cent stamps to be sold at U.S. post offices. The bill also authorizes appropriations necessary to account for the difference in postal revenue resulting from the sale of 1 cent stamps as opposed to prevailing postage rates for mail matter addressed to Congressmen which does not exceed 4 ounces in weight.

Recognizing the necessity of open communication between elected officials and people, Congress adopted the franking system allowing congressional communication between elected officials to constituents. We have neglected, however, to provide our constituents with a convenient and affordable means to access to their Senators and Congressmen. It is difficult to overstate the importance of this concept of individual expression. Each and every citizen has the right and the responsibility to participate in the democratic system, through both the ballot box and through correspondence with their Representatives between elections.

Because the effective operation of our political system is dependent upon open communication, I am hopeful that this bill will receive the early approval of the Congress.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of this bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 184

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) chapter 32 of title 39, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"§ 3219. Mail matter sent to Members of Congress

"(a) Any person may send any piece of mail matter, not exceeding four ounces in weight, for postage of 1 cent to (1) any Member of the Senate represnting the State, and (2) the Member of the House of Representatives representing the district, in which such person resides, if that person uses a special stamp issued by the Postal Service for any such matter. The Postal Service shall issue special 1-cent stamps to be used in sending such matter, and such stamps shall only be sold at post offices.

"(b) For the purposes of this section—

"(1) 'district' includes Puerto Rico and the District of Columbia;

"(2) 'Member of the House of Representatives' includes a Representative, Delegate, and Resident Commissioner; and

"(3) a Member of the House of Representatives elected at large from a state having more than one district shall be considered a Member elected from each district of that State.".

(b) The analysis of such chapter is amended by adding immediately below item 3218 the following new item:

"3219. Mail matter sent to Members of Congress.".

(c) Section 2401(c) of such title is amended by inserting after "3217" a comma and "3219".

(d) This Act is effective January 1, 1985.

By Mr. INOUYE:

S. 185. A bill to revise the laws regarding the transportation of Government cargoes in U.S.-flag vessels; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

GOVERNMENT IMPELLED CARGO ACT OF 1985

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, every nation engaged in maritime trade heavily subsidizes its merchant marine through various protectionist devices, and does whatever else it can to ensure that its national flag lines have that competitive edge.

While we have taken some steps in this direction, our international trades are still the only ones characterized by a come one, come all policy of competition. Thus, it is not surprising that our national flag lines carry less than 6 percent of our international waterborne commerce.

The legislation I am introducing today would help ensure that U.S.-flag operators have the same competitive edge in our international trades that their foreign-flag counterparts have in theirs. It would do this by strengthening our current laws relating to U.S.-flag preference for Government impelled cargo.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 185

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Government Impelled Cargo Act of 1985."

CARGO AFFECTING THE NATIONAL SECURITY

SEC. 2. All waterborne cargo affecting the national security of the United States shall be transported in United States-flag vessels.

DIRECT GOVERNMENT INVOLVEMENT IN CARGO NOT AFFECTING THE NATIONAL SECURITY

SEC. 3. At least 50 per centum of the gross tonnage of all waterborne cargo not affecting the national security of the United States shall be transported in United States-flag vessels when any one of the following categories applies:

(1) The United States procures, contracts for, or otherwise obtains the cargo for its own account.

(2) The United States furnished the cargo to or for the account of any foreign nation free of any charge for the cargo.

(3) The United States sells the cargo to or for the account of any foreign nation at a price that is less than the cost to the United States of procuring, handling, and storing the cargo.

INDIRECT GOVERNMENT INVOLVEMENT IN CARGO NOT AFFECTING THE NATIONAL SECURITY

SEC. 4. (a) All waterborne cargo not affecting the national security of the United States and shipped to or from the United States shall be transported in United States-flag vessels whenever the United States provides to any entity, foreign or domestic, any form of grant, loan, credit, advance of funds, cash transfer, or guaranty, and the grant, loan, credit, advance of funds, cash transfer, or guaranty is used—

(1) to pay at least 50 per centum of the cost of procuring, contracting for, or otherwise obtaining the cargo; or

(2) to pay any of the foreign charges for the cargo.

(b) The Secretary may waive an amount not to exceed 50 percent of the gross tonnage of cargo described in subsection (a) of this section in order to permit such cargo to be carried in vessels of the recipient nation, if United States-flag vessels have equal access to cargo originating in that nation.

(c) Any grant, loan, credit, advance of funds, cash transfer, or guaranty provided in accordance with this section shall be conditioned on the responsible agency obtaining agreement by the recipient entity to comply with the requirements of this Act.

EXCEPTIONS

SEC. 5. Sections 2, 3, and 4 of this Act shall not apply to a particular shipment of cargo if—

(1) after proper notice in accordance with section 6 of this Act, no United States-flag vessel is available at competitive rates; or

(2) the Congress, by concurrent resolution, or the President declares that an emergency exists justifying a temporary waiver of one or more of those sections.

COMPLIANCE

SEC. 6. (a) The agency responsible for—

(1) procuring, contracting for, or otherwise obtaining, or furnishing or selling cargo subject to section 2 or 3 of this Act; or

(2) providing, arranging, or administering any form of grant, loan, credit, advance of funds, cash transfer, or guaranty in accordance with section 4 of this Act; shall publish a notice of need for United States-flag vessels required pursuant to this Act at least thirty days before the vessels will be needed. The Secretary shall establish by rule the content, place, and manner of publication of notices of need.

(b) If the responsible agency fails to publish a notice of need in accordance with subsection (a) of this section, it shall nevertheless contact the appropriate United States-flag carriers to determine whether any United States-flag vessels are available at competitive rates.

(c) If the responsible agency, after complying with subsection (a) or, if necessary, subsection (b) of this section, determines that no United States-flag vessels are available at competitive rates, the agency shall certify that determination to the Secretary, who shall verify the certification within two working days of receipt.

(d) If the responsible agency, after complying with subsection (a) or, if necessary, subsection (b) of this section, determines that no United States-flag vessels are available at competitive rates and so certifies to the Secretary, and that certification is verified, then the agency may use one or more foreign-flag vessels to transport the portion of the cargo that otherwise would have been transported on United States-flag vessels.

(e) Each agency shall report its compliance with or variance from the requirements of this Act, for each fiscal year, to the Secretary and to the Congress within thirty days after the end of the fiscal year. The Secretary shall establish by rule the form and content of such annual compliance reports.

(f) The Secretary shall monitor compliance with this Act and shall review the annual compliance reports required by subsection (e) of this section. The Secretary shall immediately report any finding of noncompliance with this Act to the noncompliant agency. Each agency that failed to comply with this Act in any fiscal year shall be required to make up the entire difference in United States-flag vessel carriage resulting from noncompliance by using all available United States-flag vessels, until the Secretary shall certify that compliance has been achieved.

SEC. 8. The following provisions of law are repealed:

(1) Section 2631 of title 10, United States Code, and the item relating to that section in the analysis for chapter 157 of that title.

(2) Section 901(b) of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936 (46 App. U.S.C. 1241(b)).

(3) The joint resolution entitled "A Joint Resolution requiring agricultural or other products to be shipped in vessels of the United States where the Reconstruction Finance Corporation or any other instrumentality of the Government finances the exporting of such products", adopted March 26, 1934 (Pub. Res. 17, 46 App. U.S.C. 1241-1).

EFFECTIVE DATE

SEC. 9. The effective date of this Act shall be the first day of the fiscal year following its enactment.

By Mr. INOUYE:

S. 186. A bill to further the development and maintenance of an adequate and well-balanced American merchant marine by requiring that certain mail of the United States be carried on vessels of U.S. registry; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, the legislation I am introducing would add a new section to title IV of the Merchant Marine Act of 1936 which would reestablish the general requirement that the Postal Service use vessels of U.S. registry to originate any international sea transportation of mail. An identical measure was reported by the Commerce Committee last year after hearings—S. 188.

Mr. President, the importance of the carriage of mail was recognized at the foundation of the United States in the constitutional provision which empowered Congress to establish post offices and post roads—U.S. Const. art. I, sec. 8, cl. 7. This power was early construed by the Supreme Court to include "all measures necessary" to secure the "safe and speedy transit" of the mail. Ex parte Jackson, 96 U.S. 727 (1878).

While preexisting legislation in 1891 authorized the Postmaster General to contract with American citizens for the carrying of mail on American steamships, the first general requirement that U.S. mail carried by vessel be transported on U.S.-flag ships appeared in 1420 (41 Stat. 998). That requirement was continued in the Merchant Marine Acts of 1928 and 1936. The provisions of the 1920 and 1936 acts remained in force until 1960 when Congress passed a complete revision of the postal statutes in title 39 of the United States Code (49 Stat. 1985). This revision included a provision very similar to section 405(a) of the 1936 Merchant Marine Act requiring U.S. mails to be carried on U.S.-flag ships.

In 1970, Congress again passed a complete revision of title 39 creating the U.S. Postal Service (Public Law 91-375). It did not contain a provision comparable to the previous U.S.-flag preference. No explanation for this omission was provided in either the House or Senate committee reports (S. Rept. 91-912) (H. Rept. 91-1104). However, the Postal Service continued the policy by a regulation in its postal contracting manual.

In 1981, the Postal Service deleted this regulation from the manual with no notice or hearing. This action not only terminated the longstanding policy of the Government to entrust the U.S. mail to Americans, it did so without explanation or indication that it had considered national security implications and the objective of our national maritime policy, that is, to promote the U.S. merchant fleet.

Since 1981, the international sea transport of U.S. mails has been virtually monopolized by foreign operators, including Soviet bloc ships. In fiscal year 1983 for example, foreign flags were awarded 37 of the 45 contracts let by the Postal Service, and more recent statistics indicate no decline in this trend.

From a national security standpoint the committee found this situation very disquieting. For example, until recently a Warsaw Pact operator—Polish Ocean Lines—carried our mail between New York and Bremerhaven, Germany. It is not difficult to imagine what would happen in the event of a sudden international conflict when many of these foreign-flag vessels will no longer be available; and even those that were would have divided loyalties.

Apart from considerations of national security, the committee also believes that the current policy of the Postal Service contradicts our express national maritime policy to promote the private U.S. merchant fleet.

The U.S. liner fleet is experiencing difficult financial times and has testified that this legislation would be helpful. And, when it reported identical legislation last year, the committee felt that the small additional amount which the legislation would cost is in furtherance of the objectives of the Merchant Marine Act of 1936, as amended.

Mr. President, the legislation I am introducting today is as I have mentioned, a product of hearings held in the last Congress on S. 188. Those hearings were held by the committee's Merchant Marine Subcommittee on September 27 and 29, 1983 (S. SER. 98-51). The following testified for the legislation: all U.S.-Flag liner operators, Shipbuilders Council of America, Marine Engineers Beneficial Association [MEBA], Maritime Trades Department [AFL-CIO] representing 43 unions.

The following testified against the legislation: U.S. Postal Service, Department of Transportation, and U.S. Chamber of Commerce.

The committee also received several written communications which supported S. 188; and a considerably smaller number opposing it from foreign-flag operators and foreign governments whose vessels of registry cross trade in the U.S. trades.

Significantly, although several commodity interests testified against several cargo preference bills which were also the subject of the 2 days of hearings, none opposed S. 188.

In their respective testimony, the Maritime Administration and the U.S. Postal Service raised several objections to S. 188, as introduced. Specifically, S. 188 would:

Subject the Postal Service to potentially unlimited costs;

Fail to recognize legitimate service requirements of the Postal Service by restricting the Postal Service's ability to specify container size;

Seriously undermine the Postal Service's ability to provide prompt and economic services for international surface mail; and Reduce competition and thus restrict the Postal Service to artificial market of elevated prices and inferior services.

As a consequence of the testimony it received and its own deliberations, the committee, on April 10, 1984, ordered S. 188 reported with an amendment in the nature of a substitute. As reported, S. 188 would:

Generally require the U.S. Postal Service to use exclusively U.S.-flag vessels for the international sea transportation of the U.S. mail, unless: No U.S.-flag vessels are available at the time; or no U.S.-flag vessels can provide service sufficient to meet the actual needs of the Postal Service;

Require that rates charged for the sea transportation of mail be subject to the Shipping Act of 1984; and not be higher than rates charged by those carriers for transporting like goods for private persons;

Require competitive bidding where two or more ocean common carriers seek to enter into a contract offered by the Postal Service. No contract could be awarded for more than 1 year; and Permit the Postal Service to specify the size of containers in its invitation for bids or requests for proposals when so required by the physical handling limitations of the destination.

In the committee's judgment S. 188, as reported, met the major objections of the administration and the U.S. Postal Service, and the bill I am introducing today is identical to S. 188, as reported.

Mr. President, briefly I would like to discuss the objectives against the original version of S. 188 which were raised at the hearing, and the reasons why the committee believed they have been met. The committee's reasoning is equally applicable to the measure I am introducing today because it is identical to S. 188, as reported.

1. Objection: S. 188 subjected the Postal Service to potentially unlimited costs.

Rebuttal: This objection rested on a provision in the original version of S. 188 which provided a formula for a rate floor, but no ceiling. In other words, it was contended that in the situations where only one U.S. carrier provided service, that carrier would have been able to name its own price, incorporating as much more than a fair and reasonable profit as it wished.

Whatever the merits of that contention were, they were no longer valid because S. 188, as reported discarded the original formula. Under the new provision there is a ceiling on rates, i.e., a carrier's rates may be no higher than the rates it charges for transporting "like goods" for private persons.

The term "like goods" is the same language used in the statute which provides for the carriage of military cargo. 10 U.S.C. sec. 2631. "Like goods" means commodities which are comparable in terms of ocean transportation.[1] For example, the "mail" under this bill which moves in ocean transportation generally consists of relatively small parcels, packages, cartons, boxes, etc., which are similar to the normal container traffic.

2. Objection: S. 188 failed to recognize legitimate service requirements of the Postal Service by restricting the Postal Service's ability to specify container size.

Rebuttal: As amended, S. 188 permitted the Postal Service to specify container size only when required by the physical handling limitations of the destination.

3. Objection: S. 188 seriously undermined the Postal Service's ability to provide prompt and economic services for international surface mail.

This objection was based on the Postal Service's testimony that the transit time of foreign carriers is on the average of 5 days less than that of U.S. carriers.

Rebuttal: The statistics attached as appendix A indicate that U.S. carriers have a transit time equal to or more rapid than most foreign-flag vessels to most of the major destinations.

Furthermore, S. 188, as amended, permitted the Postal Service to ship mail on foreign-flag vessels when no U.S.-flag vessels can provide service sufficient to meet the actual needs of the Postal Service.

4. Objection: S. 188 reduced competition and thus restricted the Postal Service to an artificial market of elevated prices and inferior services.

Rebuttal: S. 188 required competitive bidding so it did not reduce competition among U.S.-flag carriers. Moreover, if U.S.-flag operators cannot meet the Postal Service's service requirements, foreign-flags may also compete with one another.

The vast majority of countries throughout the world favor their national flag vessels either through legislation or by permitting and encouraging commercial practices which have the same effect. Simply stated, some sort of national favored treatment is the price of admission to the world of international liner shipping.

While S. 188 may cost a little more ($1.4 million in FY 1983 according to the Postal Service) that cost will not be borne by the Federal Government. Moreover, the committee felt that the additional cost was a small price to pay if it will help strengthen our security by making it more likely U.S. mail will sail on U.S.-flag vessels.

[1] United States Lines Co. v. United States, 223 F. Supp. 838 (S.D.N.Y. 1963), aff'd 324 F.2d 97 (2d Cir. 1963) (Government's right to use lower rates charged for comparable cargo to private shippers upheld).

Mr. President, I believe that the minor additional cost attendant on the requirement that U.S. seaborne mail move on U.S.-flag vessels is heavily outweighed by the national interest in the security of the United States and the maintenance of a strong U.S. liner fleet.

The legislation I am introducing is intended to reverse the current situation where a majority of this mail is carried on foreign bottoms, including Polish Ocean Lines, a Warsaw Pact operator. Presently, foreign-flags have 38 of the 44 contracts let by the Postal Service. I believe this circumstance is symptomatic of an attitude which appears to dictate that institutions of the Federal Government go out of their way to make it difficult for our merchant marine to compete. This is especially troublesome because the price of admission to the world of ocean liner shipping is favoritism for national lines through cargo reservation laws, other direct and indirect subsidies, or permitting restrictive commercial practices which have the same effect. One way or another every maritime nation ensures that its national flags have that extra edge.

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS

Section 1. Section 1 adds a new section 405 to the Merchant Marine Act of 1936.

Section 405(a) of the bill requires the Postal Service to contract for the use of vessels of U.S. registry to originate the international transportation of U.S. Mail if the vessel operator provides regular transportation services to the specified destination. The Postal Service is not required to enter into such contracts if there are no available vessels or if these vessels cannot provide service sufficient to meet the actual needs of the Postal Service. Actual needs are those terms and conditions of service which are reasonable in light of commercial practices within a given trade.

In several recent procurements for service in the North Atlantic trade, the Postal Service issued requests for proposals which contained unrealistic transit times. During its deliberation on S. 188, the committee considered these practices to be unacceptable and the purpose of this section of the bill is to prevent an occurrence of such practices.

Section 405(b) of the bill requires that rates for carriage of mail under subsection (a) must comply with the provisions of the Shipping Act of 1984, which provides for a nondiscriminatory regulatory process for the common carriage of goods for private persons. Mail, particularly fourth-class mail, can be a heterogeneous commodity; therefore, the term "like goods" refers to cargoes of similar but no necessarily identical characteristics. This provision is not intended to set a carrier's "not otherwise specified" tariff rate as the rate ceiling for the carriage of mail.

Section 405(c) requires that contracts under subsection (a) be awarded by competitive bidding. The term "competitive bidding" includes both advertised and negotiated procurements. Contracts are limited to 1 year duration which, I understand, is the normal practice of the Postal Service in international trade.

Section 405(d) precludes the Postal Service from contracting for the use of cargo containers on the basis of container size, unless required by the physical handling limitations of the destination. This provision is comparable to that in the Container Standards Act.

Section 405(e) contains a definition of "common carrier."

Section 2. Section 2 exempts section 405 of the Merchant Marine Act of 1936 from a provision in title 39, United States Code, which makes public or Federal contract laws not applicable to the Postal Service.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 186

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That title IV of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, as amended (46 App. U.S.C. 1141 et seq.), is amended by adding at the end thereof a new section to read as follows:

"SEC. 405. (a) The Postal Service shall contract for the use of vessels of United States registry to originate any international sea transportation of mail of the United States in any case in which the common carrier which operates or controls such vessel is engaged in the provision of regular transportation services to the destination specified by the Postal Service. The Postal Service shall not be required to enter into any such contract if no such vessels are available at the time the Postal Service seeks to arrange for the transportation of such mail, or if no such vessels can provide service sufficient to meet the actual needs of the Postal Service.

"(b) Any rate charged for the international sea transportation of mail of the United States under subsection (a) of this section shall comply with the provisions of the Shipping Act of 1984 (Public Law 98-237). Any such rate shall not be higher than rates charged by such carrier for transporting like goods for private persons.

"(c) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, in any case in which two or more common carriers seek to enter into a contract offered by the Postal Service under subsection (a) of this section, the Postal Service shall award such contract by competitive bidding and the duration of any such contract may not exceed 1 year.

"(d) The Postal Service shall not give any preference to any common carrier for the carriage of mail by sea based upon the basis of length, height, or width of cargo containers. Unless required by the physical handling limitations of the destination, no invitation for bids or request for proposals for the carriage of mail may specify the use of containers of any particualr length, height, or width.

"(e) For purposes of this section, the terms 'common carrier' means any common carrier, other than any ferryboat running on regular routes, engaged in the transportation by water of passengers or property between the United States (or any of its districts, territories, or possessions) and any foreign country, whether in the import or export trade, except that a cargo commonly referred to as an ocean tramp shall not be considered to be a common carrier.".

SEC. 2. Section 410(b) of title 39, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end therof the following new paragraph:

"(9) Section 405 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, as amended.".

By Mr. INOUYE:

S. 187. A bill to increase the role of the Secretary of Transportation in administering section 901 of the Merchant Marine Act of 1936; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, the legislation I am introducing today would centralize authority in the Secretary of Transportation for administering and implementing Public Law 664, which requires that at least 50 percent of Government-generated cargoes be shipped on privately owned U.S.-flag commercial vessels to the extent such vessels are available at fair and reasonable rates.

Mr. President, I wish to emphasize that this proposal does not expand the scope of our existing cargo preference laws. It is intended to remedy a longstanding problem wherein Government agencies administering programs subject to our cargo reservation laws continually seek to evade the requirements of those laws. The only way to end this undesirable situation is to place one official in charge with clear authority to ensure that those laws are administered and implemented as Congress intended. Logically, that official should be the Secretary of Transportation, and that is what the legislation I am introducing today would do.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 187

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 901(b)(2) of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936 (46 App. U.S.C. 1241(b)), is amended to read as follows:

"(2) The Secretary of Transportation shall have the sole responsibility for determining and designating those programs which are subject to the requirements of this subsection. Every department or agency having responsibility for the programs so designated by the Secretary of Transportation shall administer such programs with respect to this subsection under regulations issued by the Secretary of Transportation. The Secretary of Transportation shall review such administration and shall annually report to the Congress with respect thereto.".

By Mr. INOUYE:

S. 188. A bill to amend the Shipping Act of 1916, to provide for jurisdiction over common carriers by water engaging in foreign commerce to and from the United States utilizing ports in nations contiguous to the United States; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, the purpose of the bill I am introducing today is to make certain common carriers by water in foreign commerce subject to the tariff-filing requirements of the Shipping Act of 1984 and to the jurisdiction of the Federal Maritime Commission [FMC]. The carriers affected are those that engage in the ocean transportation of property originating in or destined for a U.S. point by way of a port in a nation contiguous to the United Stats if the carrier advertises or solicits the transportation within the United States. The result of the bill would be to put the described carriers in the same position for purposes of filing tariffs as carriers that move property by way of U.S. ports.

Mr. President, section 8 of the Shipping Act of 1984 requires each common carrier and conference serving U.S. ports to file with the FMC tariffs showing its rates, charges, classifications, rules, and practices between all points or ports on its own route and on any through transportation route that has been established. These carriers and conferences may not increase rates except on 30 days notice, and may not quote a reduction until the rate is on file at the FMC.

Section 10 of the act enumerates certain prohibited conduct. Among other things common carriers and conferences are prohibited from: Charging or receiving compensation inconsistent with rates shown in their tariffs or service contracts; rebating or refunding any portion of their rates; and extending or denying privileges except in accordance with their tariffs.

Within broad guidelines, carriers are free to fix the form and level of rates shown in their tariffs. However, having established a given rate, a carrier must make that rate available to all shippers similarly situated. For example, if a rate is predicated on a given amount of cargo, any shipper tendering that amount of cargo is entitled to the rate. If carriers operating through contiguous nations are currently offering discriminatory rates to preferred shippers, this bill would clearly expose them to the prohibitions of the Shipping Act.

However, carriers that do not operate through a U.S. port are not now subject to these restrictions. They are, therefore, free to quote whatever rate is necessary in order to obtain cargo. They can discriminate between shippers and change rates without advance notice.

Mr. President, these differences give those carriers that service U.S. shippers through Canadian ports a competitive advantage over carriers using U.S. ports.

Mr. President, the amount of containerized cargo originating in or destined for points in the United States and transported through Canadian ports has grown since the mid-1970's. The Maritime Administration [MARAD] published a report in June 1983—U.S. exports and imports transshipped via Canadian ports—1981. The report presents the dollar value and estimated tonnage of U.S. exports and imports transshipped through Canada in 1981.

MARAD figures show a continuing increase since 1975 in the value and amount of the diverted cargo. In 1976 MARAD estimated that 1.4 million long tons were shipped through Canada. By 1980 the figure had risen to 2.2 million long tons, and in 1981, 2.3 million long tons of cargo found their way through ports in Canada.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that two tables from that report, together with the text of the bill, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the tables and bill were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EXPORTS

Table 1-E compares the dollar values and estimated tons for the years 1976 through 1981 via Canada through U.S. gateways. U.S. exports transshipped through Canadian ports in 1981 were valued at $2,428 million, up $329 million from 1980, a 16 percent increase, with estimated long tons decreasing by ten percent from 1,179,292 to 1,064,054 long tons.

S. 188

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Shipping Act, 1916, as amended (46 App. U.S.C. 801 et seq.), is amended by adding the following new paragraph between the first and second paragraphs of section 1 thereof:

"The term 'common carrier by water in foreign commerce' includes a common carrier engaged in the ocean transportation of property originating in or destined to a United States point by way of a port in a nation contiguous to the United States and that—

"(1) advertises, solicits, or arranges, directly or through an agent, within the United States, for such transportation; and

"(2) engages, directly or through an agent, in the transportation of such property between a point within the United States and a port in a nation contiguous to the United States.".

SEC. 2. Each common carrier included within the meaning of the term "common carrier by water in foreign commerce" by virtue of this Act that is in operation on the date of enactment of this Act shall initially file its tariff or tariffs with the Federal Maritime Commission in accordance with section 8 of the Shipping Act of 1984 (46 App. U.S.C. 1707), within ninety days after the date of enactment of this Act. Failure to file within this period is a violation of section 8 of the Shipping Act of 1984. If timely filed, these tariffs become effective on the date filed. If not timely filed, the tariffs become effective thirty days after the date filed.

SEC. 3. (a) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, no common carrier included within the meaning of the term "common carrier by water in foreign commerce" under the Shipping Act, 1916, shall be required in any tariff filed with the Federal Maritime Commission to state separately or otherwise reveal in such tariff the portion of such tariff attributable to transportation between the point of origin or final destination in the United States of the property transported and the United States port or the port in a nation contiguous to the United States by way of which such property is transported.

(b) Nothing in this Act or the amendments made by this Act shall be construed to require any common carrier by water in foreign commerce, as defined under section 1 of the Shipping Act, 1916 (46 App. U.S.C. 1801), to reveal any information with respect to transportation of any property between a point of origin or final destination in the United States and a United States port or a port in a nation contiguous with the United States, except insofar as the costs of such transportation comprise an undifferentiated portion of the whole amount of any tariff required to be filed under section 8 of the Shipping Act of 1984 (46 App. U.S.C 1707).

(c) Nothing in this Act or the amendments made by this Act shall be construed to extend to the Federal Maritime Commission any jurisdiction over or authority to regulate rail carriers.

By Mr. INOUYE:

S. 189. A bill to provide for consideration of certain policy objectives in order to promote the development and maintenance of an efficient ocean transportation system, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

MARITIME AGREEMENTS ACT OF 1985

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, the legislation I am introducing today is intended to provide statutory guidance to our own Government and notice to other maritime nations as to the minimal requirements for any intergovernmental maritime agreement that provides for or limits access to liner cargo in the foreign commerce of the United States.

Mr. President, I wish to emphasize that my proposal does not encourage a policy of bilateralism. Rather, it says, in effect, when our Government decides to enter into a bilateral shipping agreement such agreement must at the very least comply with the criteria set out in the bill. By specifying these minimal requirements, the legislation will provide needed policy direction, protect open competition in our trades, and set standards of fair treatment for carriers and shippers.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 189

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Maritime Agreements Act of 1985".

MARITIME AGREEMENTS

(1) by redesignating section 46 thereof as section 47; and

(2) by adding after section 45 the following new section:

"(4) to provide a mechanism to restrict or bar participation in a trade to which an intergovernmental maritime agreement applies of national shipping lines of nations that fail to assure United States liner operators equivalent participation in that nation's trades with countries other than the United States;

"(5) encouragement of stable freight rates at the lowest commercially feasible level and enhanced quality service to shippers and consignees;

"(6) encouragement of exports from the United States to achieve and maintain a favorable international balance of payments;

"(A) participation in the trade to which the agreement applies is open at all times, and without unreasonable delays, to all United States-flag carriers applying to serve the trade;

"(B) participation in the trade which the agreement applies is open at all times, and without unreasonable delays, to all reciprocal carriers applying to sever the trade, unless the reciprocal nation elects to limit the participation of such carriers;

"(C) the collective share of liner cargo available to United States-flag carriers in the trade to which the agreement applies is not less than the collective share available to reciprocal carriers;

(D) all common carriers by water in foreign commerce participating in the trade to which the agreement applies shall agree to retain an effective neutral policing body;

"(E) there are no provisions in the agreement and no requirements of the reciprocal nation that discriminate against, limit entry by, or unreasonably inhibit or restrict operations of, any United States liner operator in the ocean trades of the reciprocal nation, other than the limitations permitted under subparagraphs (A) through (D) of this paragraph; and

"(F) there are no provisions in the agreement and no requirements of the reciprocal nation that are unjustly discriminatory to United States shippers or ports or between exporters from the United States and their foreign competitors.

"(4) The Committee may designate at least one representative to be a fully accredited member of each delegation of the United States Government to any international conference or meeting at which an intergovernmental maritime agreement is to be negotiated or considered.

"(e)(1) Whenever national policies of other nations might operate to exclude or otherwise discriminate against United States-flag operators in reciprocal trades with the United States, intergovernmental maritime agreements shall be presumed to be in furtherance of the declaration of policy set forth in subsection (a) of this section. The United States Government shall, therefore, undertake to negotiate and conclude such agreements where circumstances warrant. The Secretary shall, in consultation with the Secretary of State, be responsible for negotiating and concluding such agreements.

"(2) Negotiation and conclusion of intergovernmental maritime agreements shall, to the extent practicable, protect and further the opportunity of United States liner operators to participate as cross traders in international liner trades. The Secretary shall, in consultation with the Secretary of State, be authorized to restrict or bar participation in the trade to which the agreement applies of national shipping lines of nations that fail to assure United States liner operators equivalent participation in that nation's trades with countries other than the United States.

"(f) Nothing in this section shall supersede the provisions of section 901 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936 (46 App. U.S.C. 1241); the Military Ocean Transportation Act (10 U.S.C. 2631 et seq.); or Public Resolution numbered 17, Seventy-third Congress (46 App. U.S.C. 1241-1).".

S. 190. A bill to amend title 10, United States Code, to authorize former members of the Armed Forces who are totally disabled as the result of a service-connected disability to travel on military aircraft in the same manner and to the same extent as retired members of the Armed Forces are permitted to travel on such aircraft; to the Committee on Armed Services.

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, today, I am reintroducing a bill which is of great importance to a group of patriotic Americans. This legislation is designed to extend space-available travel privileges on military aircraft to those who have been totally disabled in the service of our country.

Currently, retired members of the Armed Forces are permitted to travel on a space-available basis on unscheduled military flights within the continental United States and on scheduled overseas flights operated by the military airlift command. My bill would provide the same benefits for 100-percent, service-connected disabled veterans.

Surely we owe these heroic men and women who have given so much for our country a debt of gratitude. Of course, we can never repay them for the sacrifice they have made on behalf of all of us but we can surely try to make their lives more pleasant and fulfilling. One way in which we can help is to extend military travel privileges to these distinguished American veterans. I have received numerous letters from all over the country attesting to the importance attached to this issue by veterans. Therefore, I ask that my colleagues show their concern and join me in saying "thank you" by suporting this legislation.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 190

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That chapter 53 (relating to miscellaneous right and benefits) of title 10, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof a new section as follows:

"§ 1032. Travel privileges on military aircraft for certain former members of the armed forces

"A former member of the armed forces who is entitled to compensation from the Veterans' Administration for a service-connected disability rated total in degree by the Veterans' Administration is entitled, in the same manner and to the same extent as are retired members of the armed forces, to travel on a space-available basis on unscheduled military flights within the continental United States and on scheduled overseas flights operated by the Military Airlift Command.".

SEC. 2. The table of sections at the beginning of chapter 53 of title 10, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof a new item as follows:

"1032. Travel privileges on military aircraft for certain former members of the armed forces.".

S. 191. A bill to require that imports of fresh ginger root meet all the requirements imposed on domestic fresh ginger root; to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry.

IMPORTATION OF FRESH GINGER ROOT

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, today I am reintroducing legislation which would help ensure that imported fresh ginger root is of the same quality as fresh ginger produced in the United States.

Hawaii's production of fresh ginger root, also known as jamaica ginger or awapuhi pake in the Hawaiian Islands, is subject to strict standards which guarantee a product of the highest quality. These standards have been developed by the State of Hawaii and are designed to protect consumers of ginger root from inferior products.

Imported fresh ginger root is not subject to any similar standards. Consequently, the American consumer cannot be certain of receiving the same high quality as the Hawaiian product. In addition, the standards which apply to Hawaiian-grown ginger place it at a disadvantage with imported crops. It is ironic that the regulations which Hawaii adopted to protect consumers by ensuring a high-quality product are hurting the ability of domestic producers to compete with imports.

I want to make clear that this measure is not in any way intended to prohibit or even necessarily decrease the amount of imported fresh ginger root. Its only purpose is to help make certain that the imported product is of the same high quality as the domestic product. This will protect the consuming public while allowing domestic producers to compete on an equitable basis.

Mr. President, I commend this bill to my colleagues and urge the establishment of a Federal marketing order for fresh ginger root. I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 191

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 8e of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as reenacted and amended by the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937, as amended, is further amended by inserting "fresh ginger root," after "filberts,".

By Mr. INOUYE (for himself, Mr. BOREN, Mr. DENTON, Mr. MATSUNAGA, Mr. NICKLES, and Mr. THURMOND):

S. 192. A bill to amend the Federal Meat Inspection Act and the Poultry Products Inspection Act, to permit distribution of certain State-inspected meat and poultry products, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry.

FEDERAL MEAT AND POULTRY PRODUCTS INSPECTION ACT OF 1985

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, today I am reintroducing legislation on behalf of myself, Senator BOREN, Senator DENTON, Senator MATSUNAGA, Senator NICKLES, and Senator THURMOND which would allow State-inspected meat and poultry products to enter interstate commerce. This bill would permit the sale of State-inspected meats to consumers in neighboring States and to federally inspected plants. However, it would continue the present practice of barring State-inspected meats from international trade, where by treaty all meat must be federally inspected.

Under present law, State meat inspection plants must either meet or exceed Federal standards for wholesomeness, cleanliness, and freedom from residues. However, quality State-inspected products are often barred from nearby markets by virtue of an arbitrary State line that bisects a local community. The bill we are offering will correct this inequity by allowing State-inspected meats equal access to American meat and poultry markets.

State-inspected meat and poultry plants may be smaller than the average federally inspected plant, but they produce as wholesome a product. They may follow different procedures under State law and use different equipment, but it would be a mistake to assume that their products are inferior. Take for example the requirement that all federally certified plants must provide an inspector with a private office. This may be feasible for some of the larger, newer plants which can tailor their specifications to Federal requirements, but what about the small family producer who has been making specialty meats for decades? His packing procedures and end product are as good as anyone else's, and he meets all of the necessary laws and State requirements, but what if he does not have the space for a separate inspector's office? Should we deny that producer the right to ship his products in interstate commerce? Is this fair to either the small producer or the nearby consumer who would like to buy his products but cannot because he happens to live in a different political jurisdiction?

Consumer confidence in our Nation's meat and poultry products is at an all-time high, and this bill will do nothing to harm that confidence. What it would do is end the discrimination against State-inspected meats which enjoy the confidence of consumers in 27 States throughout the country.

The benefits of this legislation are clear. First, consumers would be rewarded with a greater variety of wholesome meats at competitive prices. Second, livestock producers would not have to ship their animals clear across a State to reach a Federal plant: They could use local, State-inspected plants and still get their meat into interstate commerce, thus saving a great deal in transportation costs and helping smaller meatpacking plants stay in operation. Third, State plants would no longer be pushed to join the Federal meat inspection system.

This would save the U.S. Department of Agriculture and the American taxpayer money by keeping meat-inspection programs in the hands of individual States.

Mr. President, this bill has received favorable comment from the Secretary of Agriculture, who recommended that it be enacted into law. Hearings were also held on an identical measure, S. 593, in the 98th Congress—Senate hearings 98-471; July 21, 1983. Allowing State-inspected meat and poultry products into interstate commerce is clearly an idea whose time has come, and I urge my colleagues to join us in passing this important piece of legislation.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Federal Meat and Poultry Products Inspection Act of 1985".

A transfer of inspection authority under this paragraph may not become effective until October 1 of any year and until at least one hundred and eighty days have elapsed after notice of the proposed transfer has been given to the appropriate Federal and State officials. The Secretary may, in his discretion, make individual exceptions for any applicant for Federal inspection under title I of this Act who presents clear and convincing evidence that he intends to, and will be able to, engage in foreign commerce to the extent that Federal inspections would be required, to engage in such commerce.".

(b) The second sentence of section 408 of such Act (21 U.S.C. 678) is amended to read as follows: "Marking, labeling, packaging, or ingredient requirements in addition to, or different than those made under this Act may not be imposed by any State or Territory or the District of Columbia with respect to articles prepared at any establishment under Federal inspection under title I of this Act or with respect to articles prepared for commerce at any State inspected establishment in accordance with the requirements under section 301(e) of this Act; but any State or Territory or the District of Columbia may, consistent with the requirements of this Act, exercise concurrent jurisdiction with the Secretary over articles distributed in commerce, or otherwise subject to this Act, for the purpose of preventing the distribution for human food purposes of any such articles which are not in compliance with the requirements of this Act and are outside of any federally or State inspected establishment, or, in the case of imported articles, which are not at such an establishment after their entry into the United States.".

(2) by striking out "with respect to the operations and transactions within such State which are regulated under subparagraph (1) of this paragraph (c)," in subparagraph (3) of paragraph (c) and inserting in lieu thereof "with respect to all establishments within its jurisdiction which do not operate under Federal inspection under this Act and at which any poultry are slaughtered or any poultry products are processed for use as human food and with respect to the distribution of poultry products within the State,"; and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(e) Notwithstanding any other provisions of this Act—

"(1) Poultry products processed under State inspection in any State not designated under paragraph (c) of this section, and processed in compliance with the poultry products inspection law of the State, shall be eligible for sale or transportation in commerce and shall be eligible for entry into and use in the preparation of poultry products in establishments at which Federal inspection is maintained under this Act, in the same manner and to the same extent as poultry products processed at such establishments. Poultry products complying with the requirements under the poultry products inspection laws of States not designated under paragraph (c) in which the products were processed shall be considered as complying with this Act. Such State inspected poultry products, and federally inspected poultry products processed, in whole or in part, from such State inspected poultry products, shall not be eligible for sale or transportation in foreign commerce and shall be separated at all times from all other federally inspected poultry products in any federally inspected establishment which engages in the processing, sale, or transportation of poultry products for foreign commerce.

A transfer of inspection authority under this paragraph may not become effective until October 1 of any year and until at least one hundred and eighty days have elapsed after notice of the proposed transfer has been given to the appropriate Federal and State officials. The Secretary may, in his discretion, make individual exceptions for any applicant for Federal inspection under title I of this act who presents clear and convincing evidence that he intends to, and will be able to, engage in foreign commerce to the extent that Federal inspection would be required, to engage in such commerce.".

(b) The second sentence of section 23 of such Act (21 U.S.C. 467e) is amended to read as follows: "Marking, labeling, packaging, or ingredient requirements in addition to, or different than, those made under this Act may not be imposed by any State or Territory or the District of Columbia with respect to articles prepared at any establishment subject to Federal inspection under this Act or with respect to articles prepared for commerce at any State inspected establishment in accordance with the requirements under section 5(e) of this Act. Further storage or handling requirements found by the Secretary to unduly interfere with the free flow of poultry products in commerce shall not be imposed by any State or Territory or the District of Columbia. However, any State or Territory or the District of Columbia may, consistent with the requirements of this act, exercise concurrent jurisdiction with the Secretary over articles distributed in commerce, or otherwise subject to this Act, for the purpose of preventing the distribution for human food purpose of any such articles which are not in compliance with the requirements under this Act and are outside of any federally or State inspected establishment, or, in the case of imported articles, which are not at such an establishment after their entry into the United States.".

By Mr. INOUYE (for himself, Mr. HOLLINGS, Mr. HEFLIN, Mr. LAUTENBERG, Mr. RIEGLE, and Mr. EXON):

S. 193. A bill to authorize funds for the U.S. Travel and Tourism Administration; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

U.S. TRAVEL AND TOURISM ADMINISTRATION AUTHORIZATIONS

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, the legislation I am introducing today will authorize the appropriation of the following amounts for the U.S. Travel and Tourism Administration: $14.5 million for fiscal year 1986; $15.5 million for fiscal year 1987; and $16.5 million for fiscal year 1988. These amounts represent a slight increase over the $12 million Congress actually appropriated for fiscal year 1985.

The U.S. Travel and Tourism Administration is the agency of Government which has the responsibility of supplementing the efforts of the private sector of the tourism industry to promote the United States as an international tourism destination. The money spent by the Travel and Tourism Administration is money well spent. The agency marketing programs have a cost/benefit ratio of $18.5 to 1.

Mr. President, the modest increase in funding which my proposal would make is fully justified by the economic importance of tourism, and the intense competition among nations for the international tourist.

Mr. President, I believe the following statistics illustrate quite well how large and important an industry tourism is:

In 1983, worldwide travel volume was 3.6 billion arrivals; 21.7 million foreign visitors came to the United States that year; and in our domestic travel market there were 540 million household trips and 1 billion person trips.

Foreign visitors to the United States spent about $11.4 billion in 1983, and our domestic travel expenditures by U.S. residents amount to $198.5 billion. Total travel spending therefore amounted to $210 billion.

The travel industry is the second largest retail or service industry in the United States—food stores is the largest; $253 billion.

Tourism is among the three largest employers in 39 States

In 1982 tourism expenditures generated $11 billion in Federal tax revenues, $7 billion in States tax revenues; and $2.1 billion in local tax revenues.

Tourism is also the least polluting of all industries.

Mr. President, economics aside, I believe it is also noteworthy that we continue to exchange tourists with countries where our diplomatic relations are not always the best—Russia, the People's Republic of China, Cuba, Nicaragua, to cite a few.

Mr. President, this modest increase in funding would also help the Travel and Tourism Administration compete for the international tourist.

Currently, the agency has six regional offices—Canada, Mexico, Germany, France, the United Kingdom, and Japan—and three more are scheduled to open in Italy, the Netherlands, and Australia. The Soviet Union, by comparison, has 28 foreign offices; the United Kingdom 20; and Canada 23—14 of these are in the United States.

In terms of funding national tourism offices the United States ranked 38th in 1983—$7.6 million.

Mexico ranked first—$182 million.

Czechoslovakia ranked second—$134.8 million.

Korea ranked seventh—$59 million.

Jamaica ranked 12th—$29.5 million.

Syria ranked 22d—$13.8 million.

Costa Rica ranked 34th—$8.7 million.

Mr. President, even in times of fiscal austerity, funding the Travel and Tourism Administration is a sound investment which should help ease our balance-of-payments deficit, and contribute much needed dollars to the economy.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 193

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the first sentence of section 304 of the International Travel Act of 1961 (22 U.S.C. 2126) is amended by inserting immediately before the period at the end thereof the following: ", $14,500,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1986, $15,500,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1987, and $16,500,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1988".

By Mr. MOYNIHAN:

S. 194. A bill to identify, commemorate, and preserve the legacy of historic landscapes of Frederick Law Olmsted, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

OLMSTED HERITAGE LANDSCAPES ACT

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I rise today, the first day of the 99th Congress, to reintroduce legislation to commemorate, identify, and preserve the legacy of the historic landscapes of Frederick Law Olmsted, Sr., his associates—such as Calvert Vaux, Charles E. Eliot, and Warren Manning—sons, and professional descendants. Olmsted is considered the father of landscape architecture in this country. His most notable works include Central Park and the Capitol grounds, but his design philosophy and ecological sensitivity have influenced virtually every urban area in the Nation. His achievements are great ones.

The bill I am reintroducing, the Olmsted Heritage Landscapes Act of 1985, would direct the Secretary of the Interior to coordinate the burgeoning private and State and local efforts to identify, commemorate, restore, and preserve the myriad Olmsted or Olmsted-influenced parks, forests, parkways, college campuses, cemeteries, and recreation areas in 37 States and the District of Columbia.

The bill would require the Secretary to direct that an inventory of Olmsted's works be prepared. Such an inventory will contain an evaluation of individual landscapes' national or international historic significance and other factors. Additionally, the Secretary would provide—in consultation with the Advisory Council on Historic Preservation—technical assistance to other Federal agencies, State and local governments, and public and private organizations and individuals working to identify, commemorate, restore, and preserve Olmsted heritage landscapes. Finally, the bill would create a seven-member Advisory Committee on Olmsted Heritage Landscapes. The committee would assist the Secretary and the Advisory Council on Historic Preservation in carrying out their responsibilities under this act.

Mr. President, this legislation contains little in the way of new authority or additional responsibility. It is intended to provide a necessary augment to private sector initiatives already underway. The cost of the bill is negligible: The Congressional Budget Office estimates a 10-year cost of between $2 and $3 million. Accordingly, an authorization for the appropriation of $2.5 million, to remain available until expended, is included.

Many, if not all, of Olmsted's premier works suffer from overuse and inadequate maintenance. Deteriorating infrastructure and adverse development threaten them. It is imperative that the Federal Government join—in a limited way—the effort to locate Olmsted's work and to preserve them. I might add that identical legislation is being introduced in the House of Representatives by Representative SEIBERLING. A similar measure he introduced last year, H.R. 4356, was passed by the House on August 6, 1984, but no action was taken by the Senate. I am optimistic that the legislation will fare better this year. I urge my colleagues to support it.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that my statement and the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 194

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SHORT TITLE

SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the "Olmsted Landscapes Act of 1985".

CONGRESSIONAL FINDINGS

SEC. 2. The Congress finds and declares that—

(1) Frederick Law Olmsted, Senior, was the premier American landscape architect during the nineteenth and early twentieth centuries and is considered the father of landscape architecture in the United States;

(2) Olmsted's philosophy and designs influenced the development of landscapes throughout the Nation, including national, State, and local parks, forests, parkways, college campuses, cities and planned communities, and publicly and privately owned estates, institutions, cemeteries, and recreation areas;

(3) Olmsted's associates, sons, and professional descendants carried out his philosophy and designs well into the twentieth century and, coupled with the achievements of Olmsted himself, have left a tremendous legacy of historic landscapes and a philosophy that continue to benefit the American people and, people throughout the world;

(4) Olmsted's social responsibility, ecological sensitivity, and landscape design creativity have inspired the development of large urban parks for public benefit in urban areas throughout the United States, creating a legacy of parks which today constitute a singular feature of the urban experience;

(5) age, overuse, deteriorating infrastructure, inadequate maintenance, and inappropriate developments threaten these historic landscapes and many may be damaged or destroyed in the absence of a coordinated program to protect them;

(6) although voluntary, private efforts have been initiated to identify, commemorate, restore, and preserve the Olmsted legacy, the enormity and complexity of the task and the diverse ownerships of the sites throughout the country require the assistance and cooperation of all levels of government and the leadership and support of the Federal Government; and

(7) existing Federal programs relating to parks, recreation, and historic preservation can be expanded and utilized to preserve the Olmsted legacy for the use and enjoyment of present and future generations.

(2) assisting the Council in evaluating undertakings that may affect Olmsted heritage landscapes, during the Council's consultation processes under the National Historic Preservation Act (including section 106 and section 110 of that Act) and under section 402 of the National Historic Preservation Act Amendments of 1980 (94 Stat. 2987);

(3) providing advice on any other landscape that may qualify, because of its Olmsted influence, as an Olmsted heritage landscape under section 3; and

(4) making other recommendations concerning the implementation of this Act.

(b) The Committee shall be composed of seven members, to be appointed by the Chairman of the Council, as follows—

(1) two members to be appointed from recommendations submitted by national organizations concerned with Olmsted parks and heritage landscapes, Olmsted papers, and other Olmsted memorabilia;

(2) two members to be appointed from recommendations submitted by national organizations concerned with landscape architecture, historic architecture, architectural history, and historic preservation; and

(3) three members to be appointed from recommendations submitted by national park, conservation, and recreation organizations.

Each member of the Committee shall serve for a term of four years from the expiration of his predecessor's term; except that the members first appointed shall serve terms of one to four years, as designated by the Chairman of the Council at the time of appointment, in such manner as to ensure that the terms of not more than two members will expire in any one year. A member may not serve more than two terms. A member whose term has expired shall serve until that member's successor has been appointed. The Chairman of the Council shall designate one member of the Committee as Chairman, and shall fill vacancies in the same manner as original appointments are made.

(c) Members of the Committee shall serve without compensation as such, but may receive reimbursement for necessary travel and subsistence expenses reasonably incurred in carrying out their responsibilities under this Act.

(d) The Chairman of the Council (or his designee) shall from time to time, but at least semiannually, meet and consult with the Committee on matters relating to the identification, evaluation, restoration, and preservation of Olmsted heritage landscapes, and shall seek the recommendations of the Committee during any consultation process required by the National Historic Preservation Act when that process concerns an Olmsted heritage landscape. Upon the request of the Committee, the Council shall provide such staff support as necessary.

(e) The Committee shall terminate on December 31, 1995, but may be extended by the Council for not longer than five additional years unless otherwise determined by the Congress.

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 9. Effective on October 1, 1985, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the purposes of carrying out this Act the sum of $2,500,000 to remain available until expended.

By Mr. KENNEDY (for himself and Mr. HATFIELD):

Senate Joint Resolution 1. A joint resolution calling for a mutual and verifiable freeze and reduction in nuclear weapons; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

NUCLEAR FREEZE

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I am proud to join again with Senator MARK HATFIELD of Oregon in reintroducing our Senate resolution calling for a comprehensive mutual and verifiable nuclear weapons freeze with the Soviet Union, followed by substantial reductions in the nuclear arsenals on both sides.

It is appropriate that our resolution bears the designation Senate Joint Resolution 1 in the 99th Congress, because now more than ever, adoption of an arms control agreement which stops and then reverses the nuclear arms race represents the most important issue facing the Congress and the world today. As we await the meeting between Secretary of State Shultz and Foreign Minister Gromyko in Geneva next week, we take this opportunity to renew our call for the administration to pursue the objective of a complete and verifiable halt to the nuclear arms race.

A nuclear weapons freeze may well be our last best hope to halt the nuclear arms race and reduce the danger of nuclear war. Although the Shultz-Gromyko meeting is a hopeful sign, meaningful arms control will only be achieved when the administration embraces a concrete substantive arms control proposal which offers a real chance of lessening the risks of nuclear holocaust.

Unfortunately, the administration's record over the past few years has represented deep confusion and disarray, if not outright hostility to arms control. Even today, we hear conflicting statements from the President and his leading advisors concerning the administration's willingness to negotiate a halt in its dangerous and destabilizing Star Wars Program. The administration's intransigency has divided our Nation, confused and disheartened our allies and given propaganda windfalls to our adversaries.

The United States and the Soviet Union are rapidly approaching the point of no return in nuclear escalation; it is time for both sides to take immediate and concrete steps to reduce the risk of nuclear war. And the most important step of all is to begin with a comprehensive nuclear weapons freeze that stops the nuclear arms race in its tracks and prevents further nuclear escalation.

Together, the United States and the Soviet Union now possess the equivalent of 1 million Hiroshima bombs. This stockpile equals 4 tons of TNT for every man, woman, and child presently living of this planet. The two great powers are bristling with weapons that could kill more people, burn more buildings, and sack more cities, than in all the conflicts from the beginning of history. The Earth itself is an endangered species. Despite all our bombs and all our missiles, we stand essentially defenseless upon a stage on which the human drama could be closed in the flashing of a fireball.

Yet many in the administration continue to treat the possibility of nuclear exchange as an acceptable option. An official of the National Security Council foresees a 40 percent probability of such a conflict. He is all too typical of those in high places who seem all too ready for nuclear war. A Deputy Under Secretary of Defense has even said that all we need to survive is a shovel to dig a hole, a door and a pile of dirt on top to keep the fallout out. The administration continues to push a Star Wars proposal that can never provide a miraculous umbrella of security. Even if only 10 percent of the Soviets nuclear warheads penetrate our Star Wars shield, the resultant destruction would kill at least 100 million Americans and destroy our civilization.

We should reject the argument that 20 or 40 or 100 million Americans killed ever can be a tolerable rate of casualties in a so-called limited nuclear exchange. We should reject Secretary of Defense Weinberger's new strategic doctrine for fighting and winning a protracted nuclear conflict.

As an American, I believe in a national defense second to none. But I also believe that the endless nuclear arms spiral adds nothing to our national security.

A nuclear weapons freeze has the clear advantage of bypassing endless, irresolvable arguments about which side is ahead. Too often, we find that inequality is in the eye of the beholder. In fact, both sides today are at essential nuclear parity. Each side, even after absorbing a first strike, can destroy the other many times over. The United States can make the Soviet rubble bounce all the way from Moscow to Vladivostok, and the Soviets can make our rubble bounce all the way from the Potomac to the Pacific.

A freeze will not reduce, but increase, our national security. It will halt the development of more powerful Soviet rockets and block the further deployment of existing weapons. It will prevent one side from perfecting its capacity for a first strike against the other. The result will be substantial reduction in the fear of any first strike.

The administration opposes a nuclear weapons freeze. Instead, they seem determined to move forward with new and more destabilizing weapons.

Their plan channels the arms race in a new direction. It permits the continued testing, production, and deployment of the MX missile, the Trident II missile, the Cruise missile, the B-1 bomber, the Stealth bomber, and other advanced nuclear weapons.

Equally dangerous is the administration's determined effort to push the arms race into outer space. They have fiercely resisted the Congress' effort to place a moratorium on antisatellite weapons testing, and thereby threaten our best opportunity to achieve a meaningful arms control agreement in this area. The United States will be harmed far more than the Soviets by this new arms race because of our greater reliance on satellites for early warning and communications. Yet the administration presses ahead, heedless of the consequences.

The Star Wars proposal is yet another example of the administration's dangerously misguided understanding of nuclear war and deterrence. The scientific community is nearly unanimous in concluding that a ballistic missile defense cannot be sufficiently leak-proof to prevent massive nuclear destruction. It is ineffective against bombers and cruise missiles. It will simply encourage the Soviets to build more, more powerful and more accurate offensive weapons. It will bankrupt our economy. And it will lead the United States to violate one of our most successful arms control agreements—the ABM Treaty. The wisdom that led to adoption of that treaty in 1972 remains as true today—an ABM arms race will increase, not diminish the risk of nuclear war.

While the United States builds more, the Soviet Union will not be standing idle.

The Soviets will match us missile for missile, bomb for bomb, and every step on the way down the road to a nuclear Armageddon. We do not have to be Isaac Newtons to understand the first law of the nuclear arms race—every action on one side will be matched by an opposite reaction on the other side.

We must free our diplomacy from the dangerous myth that more megatons mean better bargaining chips. We must reject the absurd theory that we can have fewer nuclear bombs tomorrow, if only we build more nuclear bombs today. The administration calls this a negotiating strategy: I call it voodoo arms control.

In his farewell address, a far-sighted Republican, President Dwight Eisenhower, warned the American people that:

> In holding scientific research and discovery in respect, we must also be alert to the equal and opposite danger that public policy could itself become the captive of a scientific-technological elite.

Some experts who oppose the nuclear freeze make the elitist argument that it is wrong to invite the public into a debate where only experts should be allowed to tread. We reply that arms control is too important to be left to those in either political party who have perpetuated the arms race. No professional elite in our democracy deserves a monopoly on what is the ultimate issue of personal survival for 200 million Americans and countless millions more around the globe. While negotiators have been debating the nuclear version of how many angels can dance on the head of a pin—which is, precisely how high can each side make the rubble bounce?—concerned citizens in the real world, in every region of our country, are asking the Government to halt the madness and put forth a sane alternative to break the deadlock.

The freeze continues to gain momentum throughout America and in Congress. In the past several years hundreds of town meetings, city councils and State legislatures have added their voices to the nationwide call to halt the nuclear arms race. The House of Representatives adopted the freeze in May, 1984; the Senate has debated and voted on the issue twice and we have gained support. We will bring this resolution to the Senate again and again until a mutual and verifiable nuclear weapons freeze becomes the arms control policy of our Nation.

I urge the administration to make the nuclear weapons freeze the policy of our Government, and I urge the Senate to adopt this resolution we are introducing today.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I am pleased to rise, once again, with my good friend and colleague, Senator KENNEDY, to reintroduce our mutual, verifiable nuclear freeze resolution. I will keep my remarks extremely brief as we intend to bring this resolution to a vote this year. And I might add, Mr. President, that we intend to win this year. But if we do not, we are united in bipartisan purpose and strengthened in the resolve which flows from urgency; to force as many votes as may be necessary to direct this administration to initiate a course which will increase the prospects for survival of the human race.

There can be no more appropriate way to set the tone for the 99th Congress than to say, in effect:

> We have adopted, under the leadership of this administration and the Kremlin, a negotiated freeze. The time is long overdue to embrace the only sane task, which is a weapons freeze.

Mr. President, make no mistake about it: This concept is as valid, as relevant, and as appropriate today as it was when Senator KENNEDY and I introduced it nearly 3 years ago. All one need do is scan the possibilities of negotiation strategies which are emerging now as Secretary Shultz and Foreign Minister Gromyko prepare to meet in Geneva in order to understand the need for a broad framework which calls for halting rather than building weapons as a means of achieving equality and stability. We must make clear that we do not and will not accept arms control as usual. Having passed the threshold of 1984, we no longer tolerate a negotiation process which brands itself arms control, but which is, in fact, upward arms management. We will not stand idly by while the superpowers strive to accommodate one another's unique appetite for certain weapons while ruling out others which are less appetizing. We have no more time for such games. The situation calls upon us to think and act in a manner consistent with the challenge which beckons us. Mr. President, Senator KENNEDY and I will have much more to say on this subject in the months ahead. I do hope that what is now the first bill of this year will also become our Nation's first priority of the new year.

S.J. Res. 2. A joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States relating to voluntary silent prayer or reflection; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT RELATIVE TO SILENT PRAYER OR REFLECTION

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, the proposed constitutional amendment is virtually identical to Senate Joint Resolution 212 reported to the Senate by the full Judiciary Committee during the 98th Congress. Section 2 of the earlier proposal, relating to the concept of "equal access," has been deleted due to the subsequent passage of related legislation. I would call to the attention of my colleagues Senate Report 98-347 which fully describes the provisions of this proposal.

S.J. Res. 3. A joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States relating to voluntary school prayer; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT RELATING TO SCHOOL PRAYER

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, today I am introducing a bill identical to Senate Joint Resolution 73, the voluntary school prayer constitutional amendment, which I introduced in the last Congress at the request of the President. It received strong support on both sides of the aisle. This amendment to the Constitution, as President Reagan has repeatedly emphasized, is of vital importance to our Nation. It would restore the right to pray voluntarily in the public schools—a right which was freely exercised under our Constitution until the 1960's, when the Supreme Court ruled to the contrary.

Until the Engel and Abington School District decisions, the establishment clause of the first amendment was generally understood only to prohibit the Federal Government from officially approving, or holding in special favor, any particular religious faith or denomination. In crafting that clause, our Founding Fathers sought to prevent what had originally caused many colonial Americans to emigrate to this country—an official, state religion. At the same time, they sought, through the free exercise clause, to guarantee to all Americans the freedom to worship God without Government interference or restraint. In their wisdom, they recognized that true religious liberty precludes the Government from both forcing and preventing worship.

Justice Douglas once stated: "We are a religious people whose institutions presuppose a Supreme Being." Nearly every President since George Washington has proclaimed a day of public prayer.

Moreover, we, as a nation, continue to recognize the Deity in our Pledge of Allegiance by affirming that we are a nation "Under God." The coins in our pockets are inscribed with the motto, "In God We Trust." In this body, we begin our workday with the comfort and stimulus of voluntary group prayer—such a practice has been constitutionally upheld recently by the Supreme Court. It is absurd that the opportunity for the same beneficial experience is denied to the boys and girls who attend public schools. This situation simply does not comport with the intentions of the framers of the Constitution and is, in fact, antithetical to the rights of our youngest citizens to freely exercise their respective religions. It should be changed, without further delay.

If ratified by the States, this amendment to the Constitution would clarify that it does not prohibit vocal, voluntary prayer in the public schools and other public institutions. It emphatically states that no person may be required to participate in any prayer. The Government would be precluded from drafting school prayers. This well-crafted amendment meets with the approval of the overwhelming majority of Americans. I strongly urge my colleagues to assist President Reagan and myself in supporting prompt consideration and approval of this bill.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a copy of the voluntary school prayer constitutional amendment be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was order to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S.J. RES. 3

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following article is hereby proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of the Constitution if ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States within seven years from the date of its submission to the States by the Congress:

"ARTICLE —

"Nothing in this Constitution shall be construed to prohibit individual or group prayer in public schools or other public institutions. No person shall be required by the United States or by any State to participate in prayer. Neither the United States nor any State shall compose the words of any prayer to be said in public schools.".

S. J. Res. 4. A joint resolution to designate the week of March 24, 1985, as "National Skin Cancer Prevention and Detection Week"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

NATIONAL SKIN CANCER PREVENTION AND DETECTION WEEK

Mr. HATCH. Mr President, today I am pleased to introduce a joint resolution on behalf of myself and several cosponsors designating the week of March 24-30 as "National Skin Cancer Prevention and Detection Week".

Skin cancer is unfortunately increasing in the United States, yet much of it can be prevented. Melanoma, a frequently fatal form of skin cancer, can actually be cured if detected early enough and properly treated.

The 1983 National Institutes of Health Consensus Conference on Precursors to Malignant Melanoma found that the incidence of melanoma and the number of deaths from melanoma are increasing in many areas of the world, and emphasized that early detection and surgical removal makes it a highly curable cancer.

It is estimated that 18,000 Americans will develop a primary melanoma and over 500,000 Americans will develop other forms of skin cancer this year. There is evidence that the incidence of melanoma has doubled every decade since the 1930's and is now increasing at a faster rate than any other cancer except lung cancer in women.

In my home State of Utah, the incidence of melanoma and lip cancer is greater than in the general population, according to reports by National Cancer Institute. It is clear that a major effort at disease prevention in this area would pay great dividends. I am pleased to see that the American Academy of Dermatology is mounting a major program to inform Americans of the problem and of opportunities for prevention and detection of skin cancer.

The Academy, with its 6,700 physician members and approximately 100 local and State dermatologic societies across the United States, is mounting an educational campaign, and will be working closely with the American Cancer Society, other voluntary programs, State and Federal agencies, and the media.

The timing of the passage of the resolution is important to this effort, in that it will coincide with the spring break of many colleges and schools throughout the Nation. Many young people at this time will predictably suffer severe skin sunburn, and excessive exposure to the Sun's rays can contribute to skin cancer. This week will also coincide with several health fairs held throughout the Nation. Many local and State dermatological organizations will be sponsoring free melanoma/skin cancer prevention and detection clinics, staffed by dermatologists/volunteers at those health fairs, and at other locations.

This effort has the strong support of the White House. In a letter to Dr. Richard L. Dobson, president of the American Academy of Dermatology on November 16, 1984, Mrs. Nancy Reagan stated:

I recently was informed by Admiral William Narva, M.D., of the efforts of the American Academy of Dermatology, its membership, and its state and local organizations, regarding prevention and detection of melanomas and skin cancer . . .

I would like to take this occasion to congratulate you and your colleagues for this marvelous voluntary work, and to indicate that your efforts have strong support within the White House. I understand that it is hoped that there will be a presidential proclamation regarding this Week and you can be assured that I will lend my efforts in behalf of accomplishing that important recognition of your efforts.

I understand that all of my colleagues in the Senate will be contacted by dermatologists from their States and asked to cosponsor this resolution, and I urge them to do so promptly. Also, I understand that those dermatologists who will be staffing the prevention and detection clinics will be asking Senators from their States to visit the clinics to see how they work, and how people can be taught skin self-examination techniques for skin cancer. I ask unanimous consent that the text of the resolution appear at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S.J. RES. 4

Whereas skin cancer, including melanoma and nonmelanoma types, is the most common cancer in the United States, accounts for between 30 and 40 percent of all cancers, and is increasing at a significant rate;

Whereas the 1983 National Institutes of Health Consensus Conference on Precursors to Malignant Melanoma found that the incidence of melanoma and the number of deaths from melanoma are increasing in many areas of the world, and found evidence that early recognition and surgical removal of melanoma makes it a highly curable cancer;

Whereas 18,000 Americans will develop a primary melanoma and over 500,000 Americans will develop nonmelanoma skin cancer this year;

Whereas epidemiological studies have shown that the incidence of melanoma has doubled every decade since the 1930's and is now increasing at a faster rate than any other cancer except lung cancer in women;

Whereas melanoma has a fatality rate of 25 percent and causes 5,000 deaths per year, and nonmelanoma skin cancer causes another 2,000 deaths per year;

Whereas patients at increased risk of developing melanoma and nonmelanoma skin cancers can be identified, and early treatment of melanoma and nonmelanoma skin cancers result in high cure rates for such cancers;

Whereas sun exposure is an undisputed cause of nonmelanoma skin cancer and is an important factor in the development of melanoma;

Whereas the number of skin cancers can be reduced through sun protection measures such as the use of sunscreening topical lotions and simple changes in lifestyle;

Whereas Americans should become aware that melanoma and nonmelanoma skin cancers are major health problems, and education of the general public about prevention of melanoma and nonmelanoma skin cancers should become a national concern;

Whereas the American Academy of Dermatology and State and local dermatologic organizations are committed to heightening the awareness and understanding of melanoma and nonmelanoma skin cancers among members of the general public and the health care community; and

Whereas the first national Melanoma and Skin Cancer Prevention and Detection Program, a coordinated national voluntary effort of professional dermatologic organizations to reduce the increasing incidence of melanoma and nonmelanoma skin cancers and to better control such cancers, will occur during the week of March 24, 1985, through March 30, 1985: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the week of March 24, 1985, through March 30, 1985, is designated as "National Skin Cancer Prevention and Detection Week", and the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon all Government agencies and the people of the United States to observe the week with appropriate programs and activities.

S.J. Res. 5. a Joint resolution to amend the Constitution to establish legislative authority in Congress and the States with respect to abortion; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT WITH RESPECT TO ABORTION

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I am pleased to propose today an amendment to the Constitution—the Human Life Federalism Amendment—that would overturn the infamous decision of the Supreme Court in Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973).

This amendment was first introduced in the 97th Congress and was the subject of 7 days of hearings featuring 74 expert witnesses from all vantage points. It was approved by the Judiciary Committee in the 97th Congress, but was not considered by the Senate prior to adjournment. The opportunity for the Senate to consider this amendment proposal came in the last Congress. In a historic debate, the Senate for the first time considered a constitutional amendment with the authority to overturn the erroneous Roe decision. This was the debate amongst representatives of the people that was not held over 10 years ago when America fell subject to this indulgent policy. This was the chance America did not have then to carefully weigh all the implications of permitting wholesale abortions. This was the opportunity Americans did not enjoy then to participate in the decision by apprising their Senator of their own unique and informed vantage points. This was the occasion America did not have to consider what other options might guarantee maternal safety while protecting the unborn. This was one national opportunity to reconsider Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973). At the conclusion of that debate, the Senate did not approve this proposal by the two-thirds majority necessary for passage of a constitutional amendment. Accordingly, I propose the amendment again today with confidence that the Senate will receive another opportunity to reconsider the injustices of the Roe decision.

Roe and its companion case, Doe v. Bolton, 401 U.S. 179 (1973), granted abortion the elevated status of a fundamental constitutional right and invalidated almost all effective restrictions on abortion. The only apparent restriction in Roe's abortion policy, permission for a State, in the third trimester of pregnancy, to regulate abortion, unless necessary to preserve the health of the mother, 410 U.S. 132, was simultaneously withdrawn by Doe which defined the health exception broadly enough to encompass the mother's physical, emotional, or psychological well-being. 410 U.S. at 192. In the words of Prof. John Noonan of the University of California Law School, the absolute and plenary right to abortion created by the Court was curbed in the final stages of pregnancy only by the necessity of a physician's finding that she needed an abortion. Noonan, Private Choice 12 (1979). In short, no significant legal barriers of any kind whatsoever exist today in the United States for a woman to obtain an abortion for any reason during any stage of her pregnancy. Any lingering misconceptions about the extreme scope of the right to abortion created by the Court were laid to rest on June 15, when the Court struck down even simple State laws requiring a 24-hour waiting period for elective abortions and requiring the attending physician to inform the patient of the risks and effects of abortion.

Frankly, it is this rule of abortion on demand imposed upon a citizenry whose values are sharply at variance that has caused a decade of intense divisions and passions on the issue of abortion. This proposal offers a way to still those passions and divisions by returning to the people and their elected representatives the authority to resolve the lingering issues.

This proposal is a modest measure, in that it merely overrules Roe versus Wade without establishing a national policy on abortion. It reverses Roe and thus restores the status quo that existed for nearly 2 centuries. The States could replace the Supreme Court's extreme policy with policies tailored to respect, to the maximum degree possible, both maternal health and the life of the unborn. I will return to explain more fully the legal operation of this resolution.

Meantime we are left to contemplate the policy which this proposal will replace, namely the Roe decision. Its effects are painfully apparent. The primary effect is, of course, the loss of more than 10 times more American lives than were lost in all of our Nation's wars lumped together. Of course, when the cost of Roe in terms of lives is at stake, I must unequivocally reiterate my utmost dedication to preserving the life of the mother, even to the point of denying the unborn child's right to life if absolutely necessary. Preserving a mother's life is hardly at stake, however, when abortions are performed in America at the rate of over 4,000 per day, nearly 170 per hour, and 3 per minute. Preserving the life of the mother is hardly at stake, when in some American cities, like the Nation's capital and its largest city, more children are aborted than are permitted to be born alive. Nor can preserving the life of the mother be the explanation for the skyrocketing increase in total abortions since Roe. Since Roe, the number of abortions performed yearly in America has risen to the astounding total of nearly 2 million per year. Since 1973, more than 15 million unborn children have been aborted.

This obvious and dramatic rise in the incidence of abortions can hardly be attributed to any of the so-called hard cases, namely abortions necessary to preserve the life of the mother or to terminate pregnancies caused by rape or incest. As a result of Roe, a right to abortion was effectively established for the entire term of the pregnancy for virtually any imaginable reason, including for the sake of personal finances, social convenience, or individual life-style. One ardent proponent of abortion, Dr. Irvin Cushner, estimated that only 2 percent of all abortions could be justified as medically expedient. Hearing on Constitutional Amendments, 97th Congress, 1st session (1981). Even increasing his liberal estimate by 50 percent still means only 3 percent of all abortions are really necessary to prevent medical complications. Several other qualified physicians have averred that never in their lengthy medical careers had they encountered an abortion necessary to save the life of the mother.

No other witness at our subcommittee hearings expressed as exact a numerical estimate, but many expressed agreement that the number of abortions performed in one of the hard cases is a very tiny percentage of the total number. For example, Dr. Bernard Nathanson, who estimates that he himself has presided over about 75,000 abortions during his lifetime, could recall only one case in which the mother's life could reasonably be said to have been at stake. For various reasons, pregnancy from rape is so rare that it is difficult to pin down a percentage figure for its occurrence, but most studies indicate that it could only be a tiny fraction of 1 percent of the current abortion rate. Abortion for fetal handicap is a tiny subset within the minority of abortions performed around or after the 20th week of pregnancy—ammiocentesis can only be performed beginning around the 16th week, and test results can take weeks to obtain because of the time needed to culture the cells obtained in the procedure. Dr. Nathanson testified that these eugenic abortions were a tiny, insignificant and vanishingly small fraction of the total number of abortions done in the United States. Hearings, supra, at 169. Another practicing obstetrician-gynecologist, Dr. Jasper Williams of Chicago, testified that the number of medical cases in which abortion is an indicated and appropriate part of the treatment is practically nil. Hearings, supra, at 266. Dr. Williams said he had not seen a case of abortion necessary to save a woman's life since 1953. Even Bella Abzug, testifying before our subcommittee to oppose legal restrictions on abortion, defended abortion primarily as a method of birth control—though, to be sure, she described it as "the last desirable method of birth control." Hearing, supra, at 1174.

By emphasizing how soft the reasons for the great majority of abortions are, I do not intend in any way to imply that women take this in a frivolous way. In fact, one of the most striking features of the published interviews with women having abortions is that, in one way or another, the abortion is something she is going into with outside influence and even a certain amount of pressure. In many cases, the offer of an abortion has become a way for men to escape responsibility for their own sexual behavior. It has become a way for parents and relatives to avoid the burden and scandal of a pregnant but unwed family member. It has become an escape valve for married couples who face serious personal and financial problems of various kinds but who, instead of confronting those problems squarely, are persuaded by the mores of our society to place the burden of those very real problems on the defenseless unborn child. The blame for this scandalous situation must fall upon all of us.

Understanding the reasons for abortion is particularly relevant to the constant debate over the public opinion polls on abortion. It is very easy to find polls that claim to show majority support for abortion being between a woman and her physician. The problem here is that the survey question implies a genuine medical consultation for some health-related condition—and as we see from this chart, that is a very rare occurrence indeed. The Supreme Court has told us that the city of Akron cannot even require that the woman talk with the physician before he performs an abortion upon her. When ABC-TV broadcast the documentary called "Abortion Clinic," hosted by Jessica Savitch, one of the most revealing comments made by the young abortion counselor at the clinic was that even she did not know which abortionist would be performing a particular abortion until the pregnant woman was already lying on the operating table and the physician walked into the room for the 10-minute procedure. In this context, the woman and her physician slogan seems a hollow phrase.

Fortunately, the Gallup organization has conducted much more precise and impartial set of polls on this question; and because the same questions have been asked five times from 1975 to 1981, with remarkable consistency in the answers, these polls should be given special attention. The people surveyed were simply asked whether abortion should be illegal in all, some, or no circumstances. Those who supported legalization were asked further about those particular circumstances and the stage of pregnancy in which the abortion should be allowed. Consistently, a majority of Americans wanted even early abortion to be legal only under very specific circumstances: Danger to the mother's life or physical health, or pregnancy due to rape or incest. Less than 25 percent want legalization for all reasons, even in the first trimester—which is our present situation. According to this series of five careful surveys taken over the last 8 years, about 97 percent of the abortions now performed would not be permitted if the majority of Americans had their say in the matter. And if I may anticipate a possible objection about the gender gap, Gallup found that women were more opposed to legalization than men were.

I hasten to add, however, that we must not allow these statistics about the extent to which abortion has become a tool of convenience to obscure the individual tragedy of each abortion. Consider the case, based on fact, of a woman weighing the consequences of the pregnancy of which she has just learned. She announces to her physician that her husband is an alcoholic with a syphilitic infection; that one of her children was born dead, another is blind, and another had tuberculosis. Finally she confesses that her family has a history of deafness. Given the absence of standards in Roe, there is no question that the physician could recommend termination of her present pregnancy. Indeed when this hypothetical situation was posed for classes of medical students, they reached that conclusion almost without exception. This hypothetical fifth child of the woman seeking medical advice perfectly describes Ludwig Von Beethoven. Moreover, who can question that every child is really an irreplaceable Beethoven able to make his own unique contribution to his family, community, nation, and indeed to all mankind? We will hear much about the nebulous principle of freedom of choice later in this debate. I will ask further questions: Freedom to choose what? Freedom to choose to deny life to Beethoven or any human being? In essence, this frames the real abortion dilemma, posed concisely by President Reagan:

Roe v. Wade has become a continuing prod to the conscience of the Nation * * *. We cannot survive as a free Nation when some men decide that others are not fit to live and should be abandoned to abortion or infanticide * * * Americans do not want to play God with the value of human life. It is not for us to decide who is worthy to live and who is not. Human Life Review, spring 1983.

The President's characterization of the abortion crisis is not overstated. Our Nation has regrettably witnessed hundreds of thousands of late-term abortions since 1973. Experts verify that 15,000 abortions a year are performed after the child's 20th week, the verge of viability when the child could be delivered and live on its own. Abortions after this point are more accurately described as judicially legalized infanticides.

Although the 15 million abortions performed legally since 1973 are all tragedies, there is a special horror to the hundreds of thousands of late-term abortions which the Court's policy has permitted. Biologically, the life of each human individual comes into existence at conception; but even the most unsophisticated glance at an unborn child after the 12th week recognizes him or her immediately as a distinctive member of the human family. All of these children have distinctively human brain waves, easily recorded heartbeats, and a full array of formed and functioning organ systems. They can move spontaneously, manipulate their limbs and react immediately to painful stimuli.

As the Supreme Court noted in its recent abortion rulings, the most popular method of abortion after the 12th week is something called "dilation and evacuation," in which the unanesthetized unborn child is literally torn to pieces with a strong forceps. This is done because at this later stage, cartilage and bone have begun to harden to much to allow for complete success with the suction curette. The body parts are removed from the womb—sometimes the skull and ribcage must be crushed to accomplish this—and manually reassembled on a nearby table to insure that none is missing.

When dilation and evaculation is used, of course, the chances for the child's survival are nil. But other techniques—most notably the use of saline and prostaglandin and the surgical removal of the child by hysterotomy—are known to result at times in live births. The U.S. Centers for Disease Control estimate that this occurs more than once every day in the United States. These newborn children usually die soon after they leave the womb, due to the effects of the abortion technique and their low birthweight. In 1979, a Pennsylvania law which required life-saving treatment for abortion survivors who might be viable was knocked down as unconstitutional by the Supreme Court—Collautti v. Franklin, 439 U.S. 379 (1979). In the Akron case the Court ruled that a State has discretion as to whether or not to require a second physician in the case of abortions performed well after viability, so that these children will not die of neglect after birth—Akron, supra. The Court seems to be saying that even newborn infants, if their live birth is unintended, are not legal "persons" demanding equitable treatment. Can there be any doubt that the Court's extremism has brought us to the brink of legalized infanticide?

Once again, we need to be specific about what is being aborted. I was very deeply impressed by the impactful story of an atheist obstetrician who presided for years over the largest abotion clinic in New York City. Indeed he was one of four founders of the National Abortion Rights Action League (NARAL). A skillful and able physician, he began to study an advancing new field of medicine, fetology, study of the unborn human. He can describe in detail his growing awareness of the Humanity of the unborn. At 3 weeks, the new life has already developed its own blood cells; at 4 weeks, a muscle may flex—this will become a beating heart within a few weeks, a heart which is fully audible at 8 weeks; at 6 weeks, the child's skeletal system is complete; at 7 weeks, electrical brain patterns are discernible; at 12 weeks, all organ systems are functioning, stomach, liver, kidney, brain—in fact, some infants will have already acquired a thumbsucking habit; at 20 weeks, the fetus is punching, kicking, swimming, and hears his mother's voice; at 22 weeks, he can survive outside the womb. With these observations at his disposal, Dr. Nathanson, for medical reasons, abandoned his earlier point of view, stopped performing abortions, and began actively campaigning to acquaint the nation with the scientific reasons that the fetus is a distinct, living human. In the doctor's own words:

I changed my mind because of advances in the field of fetology which have allowed us to understand the fetus much more completely and much more carefully than we ever did before. This has posed a very severe philosophical problem, in that you can't be operating on the fetus and giving it drugs to cure it, and at the same time /be/ destroying it.—Washington Times, 3C, Jan. 17, 1983.

This brings to mind comments by two notable persons, separated in time but not in respect for life. The first, Justice Sandra Day O'Connor, aptly noted in her remarkable dissent in the Akron case, that—

The Roe framework is clearly on a collision course with itself . . . As medical science becomes better able to provide for the separate existence of the fetus, the point of viability is moved further back toward conception.—Akron,—U.S., June 15, 1983, Slip. Op. at 7.

The other spokesman is Dr. Martin Luther King. At one point when jailed for seeking civil rights in another human cause, he was asked, "Why are you in jail?" Given the circumstances, his telling reply was "Why are you not in jail?" Given the undeniable scientific evidence about the unique humanity of each unborn infant, I feel compelled to reply to those who question "Why are you bothered by abortion?" with the same logic employed by Dr. King: "Why are you not bothered?" And again, to those who employ the slogan "freedom of choice," I ask, "Freedom to choose what?" Freedom to choose to terminate a being that science identifies as a separate, living individual.

Because our fellow citizens have been confronted with the irrefutable findings of fetology and have been informed by their President of the "excruciating pain the unborn must feel as their lives are snuffed away," speech to National Religious Broadcaster's Convention, January 31, 1983, it is very understandable why reliable opinion polls demonstrate that 80 to 90 percent of Americans see abortions at some stage as the destruction of a living being. On the question of when the fetus becomes a living being, there is a gender gap. Most women believe life begins at conception.

Women, making up that segment of the population which actually experiences pregnancy, "quickening," childbirth, and abortion, have a much stronger conviction than men do that life begins at conception. A similar gap has been demonstrated in many other surveys: Women are more likely to say that abortion is morally wrong, and more likely to oppose unrestricted abortion, than men are.

Since we have drawn special attention to the woman's point of view, we should also examine the claim of those who will maintain that this is actually an issue involving primarily the right of life of pregnant women. This argument maintains that only legalized abortion can protect women from the merciless knife of the back-alley abortionist. To the contrary, legalization should receive little credit, if any, for saving women's lives. Since 1941, the biggest factors leading to a drop in women's abortion deaths have been simple medical advances: sulfa drugs, penicillin, and finally the widespread use of the safer suction curette instead of the sharp curette, a 1970 innovation. The regime of elective abortion is intended to secure far different values than those associated with maternal safety. Every State's body of law prior to 1973 acknowledged and permitted abortions necessary to save the life of the mother.

A common argument used to justify Roe is that legalization has saved women's lives, by replacing dangerous illegal abortions with "safe and legal" abortions. The situation is not so simple. Maternal mortality from abortion has been dropping at a rapid rate since 1940, chiefly because of medical advances of various kinds. By far the largest number of abortion related deaths has always been due to infection, and these deaths have been averted by the development of better drugs to treat or prevent sepsis—first by the development of sulfra drugs, then by the discovery of penicillin. After these two advances produced their effect, abortion deaths essentially leveled off again until the late 1960's, and took a sharp drop again in 1970. This is the year that abortion on demand was legalized in New York—but it is also the year when the sharp curette, which had previously been the method used in most abortions, was largely replaced nationwide in the practice of both legal and illegal abortion by the suction curette. The sharp curette, which had been used to scrape the uterine wall, had been responsible for many a perforated uterus and therefore many dangerous infections; suction curettage used a soft plastic instrument and induced abortion by a vacuum action, eliminating many of the risks from the older procedure.

Dr. Bernard Nathanson, testifying before the Senate Subcommittee on the Constitution in 1981, emphasized that it was this technological advance and not legalization that caused the sudden further decrease in maternal abortion deaths. Dr. Nathanson emphasized in his testimony that the specter of unsafe back alley abortions in the event of renewed restrictions on abortion is a myth based on outdated assumptions about the available technology.

It is of interest that after 1973, when the Supreme Court legalized abortion on demand throughout the country, maternal deaths did not continue to drop but leveled off instead. They actually went up again slightly in 1975, and again in 1977. There seems to be general agreement among statisticians that, even if abortion is now safer than ever before, total maternal deaths from abortion are not continuing to drop because the total annual number of abortions continues to rise alarmingly. Some abortion clinic scandals in recent years, most notably in Chicago and Miami, indicate another possible reason: Some safe and legal clinics operate no more conscientiously than the old back alley abortionists did, and the Federal courts have placed serious obstacles in the way of State and city authorities that try to regulate these clinics to protect women's lives and health. Some illegal abortions continue to be performed ever year and to result in some women's deaths.

If 10 years ago, the Supreme Court had possessed the same scientific and medical data we have today, it is difficult to conjecture whether they would have made the same finding as appears in Roe. And since they based their most recent ruling on the judicial principle of stare decisis, it is difficult to conjecture whether they might have reversed Roe if they had reconsidered its holding on the merits. Nonetheless it is clear that the American citizenry has the scientific evidence at its disposal. This, again, is reflected in their rejection of abortion as an acceptable ethic for a moral life. Moreover, they reach this conclusion in nearly the same proportions regardless of political persuasion.

The two-thirds majority opposed, on moral grounds, to abortion is by no means a "soft number." This majority is clearly willing to back up its convictions with meaningful action when a loved one faces the question of abortion.

According to this finding, two-thirds of those surveyed said they would not recommend abortion if a 15-year-old daughter were pregnant. Another way of handling the problem would be found.

Of course, statistics show that almost half of the unwed teen pregnancies do end in abortion at present. One factor here is that since 1976, the Supreme Court has consistently invalidated any law which might be construed to provide what the Court calls a "parental veto" of an unwed minor's abortion. It insisits that the minor must be given the alternative of a court hearing, at which a judge can decide she is mature enough to get the abortion without her parents' knowledge or that an abortion is in her "best interests"—this last could potentially become a very large hook on which to hang the judge's personal predilections about abortion. On June 15 of last year, the Supreme Court ruled it was unconstitutional even to require parental involvement in the abortion decision of an unemancipated minor under the age of 15—Akron, supra. In other words, the parents surveyed in this poll would most likely never have the opportunity to counsel with their 15-year-old daughter to find an alternative to abortion.

In most States, a minor is still required to have parental consent before marrying, getting a job, undergoing surgery, attending an adult movie, or, in some cases, even getting her ears pierced. By Court decree, however, a 15-year-old can have an abortion without any parental consultation whatsoever. This logic contradicts the reasoning of Roe. Roe placed great importance on the woman's decision to have an abortion. Yet 15-year-old minor may not have the capacity to make such decisions in their own best interest without parental involvement. For precisely this reason, States have traditionally sought to protect children from their own immature decisions by requiring parental consent for a wide variety of activities. Yet abortion, notwithstanding its remarkable consequences, can be performed on a minor without the slightest parental participation.

THE LEGAL OPERATION OF THE AMENDMENT PROPOSAL

As I have mentioned, this proposal is carefully crafted, with the help of Senator EAGLETON in the 98th Congress, to nullify the Roe decision and restore the balance upset by that decision. I would like to pause to commend Senator EAGLETON for his dedication to this cause and his insightful participation in the preparation of this amendment. In addition, I would like to thank Chairman THURMOND of the Judiciary Committee and each of the other cosponsors for their contributions to this proposal.

In the decade since Roe, Federal courts have been trying to correct tangential problems relating to abortion, and the number of unborn aborted annually has increased to over 1.5 million. These violent disruptions of our social fabric were accomplished by an equally wrenching disruption of our constitutional fabric. In short, Roe did not carry out the intent of the Constitution, but upset the Constitution's intended balance.

Although, in the words of Prof. John Hart Ely, the Constitution "simply says nothing, clear or fuzzy about abortion," Ely, "The Wages of Crying Wolf," 82 Yale L.R., 920, 947 (1973). The Supreme Court created a constitutional right to abortion. This upset the preexisting constitutional balance that for nearly 200 years had allowed State legislative processes to carry out the will of the people with respect to this sensitive social policy. The new right created by Roe overturned the Texas abortion statute and related laws in each of the 50 States. Not only did this decision upset the federalistic balance between State and National insitutions, it also disturbed the constitutional separation of powers between legislative and judicial functions. Prof. Lynn Wardle of Brigham Young University Law School makes this point very eloquently:

By giving the right to choose abortion the status of a fundamental right, the Supreme Court substantially restricted the authority of the legislative branch to legislate concerning the subject and substantially increased the responsibility of the judiciary for defining and monitoring regulation of the fundamental right. (Statement of Feb. 28, 1983).

In essense, Roe made abortion a constitutional doctrine. Despite my great reluctance to amend the Constitution, Roe upset the constitutional balance. Thus, it is incumbent upon this Senate in my view, to take the appropriate constitutional steps to restore that balance.

The most simple, direct, and effective way to accomplish that objective without disturbing other established constitutional doctrines is to nullify the Roe ruling. If Roe were fully deprived of legal significance, the constitutional balance that existed prior to 1973 would be restored. The people in the States would be reenfranchised to shape abortion policy through their legislators. Policymaking that for a decade has been centralized in the nonrepresentative judicial branch would be subject again to democratic processes. Only by restoring this constitutional balance and permitting the people to participate directly in this policymaking process will the Nation ever achieve a consensus on this devisive question.

The primary effect of the Roe decision was to make abortion a legal entitlement deserving of the strict constitutional protections afforded fundamental liberties. 410 U.S. at 728.

The right to abortion became, by court edict, a fundamental liberty which a State's legislature could limit even in the slightest degree only by demonstrating a "compelling" justification. 410 U.S. at 728. This compelling State interest standard is very exacting. Kramer, 395 U.S. 621 (1969). Even such seemingly inconsequential State regulations as a 24-hour waiting period prior to an abortion failed to meet this standard of review. Akron, supra. Although the Supreme Court has repeatedly conceded that protecting maternal safety and the life of the unborn are "legitimate State interests," Roe, 410 U.S. at 732, Akron, and so forth, these profound interests have not risen to the level of "compelling" in the eyes of the Court. Accordingly, the right to abortion has operated time and again to strike down the will of State legislatures. Protected by the Court's constitutional interpretation, one absolute extreme on abortion; namely, abortion on demand throughout all 9 months of pregnancy, has become enshrined as an unassailable tenet of American law.

This amendment proposal removes the abnormally elevated status afforded the right created in Roe. After ratification of this amendment, a State statute concerning abortion would be subject to ordinary standards of constitutional review. This standard requires a State to demonstrate a rational relationship between its policy and a legitimately protectible State interest, the rational basis test. Since the Court has already acknowledged at least two legitimate State interests, maternal safety and unborn human life, any statute rationally related to these objectives would pass constitutional muster. Thus, the will of the people, as reflected in State legislatures, would be respected. The traditional constitutional balance which governs other aspects of domestic relations law; namely, State regulation in practically all aspects, would be restored.

In short, this amendment removes the right created in Roe. The removal of this impediment to the traditional operation of the Constitution permits the framework of our Nation's foundational document to govern in this sensitive area of social policy as it did nearly two centuries until 1973. Hence, this proposal is built upon the framework of the system of governance created by the Framers of the Constitution in 1787, rather than the special right created by the Supreme Court in 1973.

Some critics of this proposal may, I suppose, accuse Senator EAGLETON, myself, and the other proponents of this amendment of attempting to impose our personal moral values upon others with this proposal. Frankly the amendment itself rebuts that assertion. It does not contain my personal position on the question of abortion at all. If I could ratify an amendment reflecting my personal moral values, it would contain a guarantee for the right to life of the unborn, except when necessary to preserve the life of the mother. This amendment does nothing of the kind. Instead it merely eliminates one absolute extreme moral position, abortion on demand as legalized by Roe, and frees the people in the States to set their own standards of governance on this subject, instead of making the whole Nation subject to the outdated doctrines of the few men in black robes. I would have said "men and women in black robes," but the woman in question should not be associated with the majority of the men on the Court on this issue.

No doubt some critics will also raise a hue and cry about this amendment injecting government into the bedrooms of America. On the contrary, this amendment was carefully crafted to avoid any jeopardy to doctrines of privacy. The term "right to abortion" is specifically limited to affect only legal entitlements for abortion, not the right to privacy. Other extensions of the right of privacy, such as in contraception, birth control or family privacy cases, would not be affected in the slightest by the narrow language of the amendment. In a more general sense, abortion can hardly be classified as a matter of privacy in the sense of something done alone, at home, in a confidential manner. The abortion right is exercised with the help of a trained professional and depends on a large medical support staff. This is a right that has required over 100 lower Federal court decisions and 18 Supreme Court decisions to guarantee its continued effectiveness. This is a right whose champions maintain cannot be exercised without public funding. This is a right, ultimately, whose effect is not private at all in the sense of touching upon only intimate personal matters of the one exercising the right, instead it has a devastating impact on at least one other, the unborn child. To call this right private is to convolute that term. As stated by the 78th National Convention in 1976 of the Union of Orthodox Jewish Congregations of America, "Abortion is not a private matter between a woman and her physician. It infringes upon the most fundamental right of a third party—that of the unborn child."

This amendment will remove the misleading character of this entire question as well as the special right created by Roe. The removal of this impediment to the traditional operation of the Constitution permits the framework of our Nation's foundational document to govern in this sensitive area of social policy as it did for nearly two centuries until 1973.

By "deconstitutionalizing" the issue of abortion, the proposed amendment would allow the States a wide variety of options with respect to this matter. In their best judgment, the States might choose to have no policy regarding abortion or might restrict and condition it in a variety of ways. For example.

First, they could place restrictions of some form upon late-term abortions;

Second, they could impose obligations upon physicians to save the lives of fetuses capable of surviving an abortion;

Third, they could place limitations upon genetic engineering and other experimental and medical research involving the use of human embroys and fetuses;

Fourth, they could require that women contemplating abortions be fully apprised of the risks of abortion and the alternatives to abortion;

Fifth, they could require some form of parental consent to abortions performed upon minors;

Sixth, they could require some form of spousal consent to abortions;

Seventh, they could establish some minimum waiting period before an abortion could take place or require some form of professional consultation prior to an abortion;

Eighth, they could establish rights of refusal to perform abortions by physicians or nurses, or in entire hospitals;

Ninth, they could limit the commerce in abortifacient devices;

Tenth, they could prohibit abortion generally subject to certain well-defined exceptions and safeguards; or Eleventh, they could undertake any other form of restriction or regulation upon the abortion procedure.

For the sake of clarity, I would like to list what this amendment would and would not do. Ratification of this resolution would accomplish the following:

First, it would nullify the special right to abortion created by the Supreme Court in 1973. Even the Supreme Court has referred to the right created in Roe as the "right to abortion." Conn. v. Menillo, 423 U.S. 9, 10. More than 80 Federal court cases have also used this phrase as shorthand for the new Roe right. This amendment simply, cleanly, directly, conclusively states that "A right to abortion is not secured by this Constitution."

Second, it would prevent the creation of any other right to abortion in the harbor of the Constitution. The article "a" makes the scope of the repeal broader than if the article "the" were used. "The" might be construed as limiting the repealer to the particular doctrine or doctrines that have developed in Roe and its progeny as a justification for abortion. Use of the article "a" makes it clear that no other "right to abortion," however conceived or justified, is provided by the Constitution. Under the language there would exist no constitutional authority for any right to abortion.

Third, it would avoid any unnecessary repudiation of the doctrine of privacy. The use of the careful phrase "right to abortion" clarifies that the amendment only repeals the abortion decisions. Other extensions of the right to privacy, such as in contraception or family privacy cases, would not be affected by the narrow language of the amendment.

Fourth, it would mean that State statutes concerning abortion would be subject to ordinary standards of judicial review; that is, the rational basis test instead of the compelling State interest test. An obvious point of explanation is needed at this point to clarify a higher standard would still apply to a State enactment that infringed some other constitutional rights unrelated to the "right to abortion" question—for example, a law prohibiting only black women from obtaining abortions would still be examined under a compelling standard—or strict scrutiny—due to the obvious racial classification, not due to any remaining right to abortion.

Fifth, it would restore to the States their general police power to restrict and prohibit abortion, or elect to refrain from doing so. The States would be restored to the legal status they enjoyed prior to Roe.

Sixth, it would reenfranchise the people, acting through their elected State representatives to participate in the formation of abortion policy. Abortion policymaking that has been centralized in the nonrepresentative judicial branch will be returned to State legislative discretion. This will facilitate the kind of compromises and consensus formation that is impossible in the judicial branch.

Seventh, it would restore the constitutional balance of powers between the States and Federal governments and between the legislative and judicial branches. In sum, it would restore the status quo ante Roe insofar as the power and responsibility to resolve abortion issues is concerned.

This proposed amendment would not do the following:

First, it would not establish any new constitutional right favoring either an absolute right to life or an absolute right to abortion. It would simply restore the operation of the constitutional system, favoring States rights to resolve abortion issues, that existed prior to 1973.

Second, it would not compel the adoption by any State legislature of any legislation restricting abortion.

Third, it would not preclude judicial review of abortion laws or prevent a court from holding abortion laws unconstitutional. A court could hold abortion laws invalid if they failed to comply with the Constitution except to the degree that such a ruling would create a "right to abortion." Thus, racially discriminatory abortion laws would be invalidated, but not ordinary abortion restrictions.

Fourth, it would not affect State constitutions, It would not prohibit the citizens in any State from adopting—or, for that matter, any State supreme court from fashioning—a right to abortion under the State constitution.

Fifth, it would not grant Congress any power to directly restrict or prohibit abortion. Congress would retain its authority under its enumerated constitutional powers to regulate interstate commerce and other areas that might tangentially touch upon abortion. This limited authority is nothing more than exists for every other form of domestic relations law—or any other law for that matter—which is subject to the plenary jurisdiction of the States.

Sixth, it would not give to the States any new authority to regulate abortion. Their general police powers to regulate abortion would be restored, but would not be enhanced.

Seventh, it would not alter the constitutional allocation of power between the State and Federal governments, or between the legislative and judicial branches.

This proposal can appropriately be called a States rights amendment. After ratification of this resolution, abortion policy will be within the plenary jurisdiction of the States in the same sense that any area of law under our Constitution is reserved to the States. The States, under our constitutional system, govern every body of law not found within the enumerated powers of the Federal Government in articles I through III, primarily article I, section 8 which defines and confines Congress' power to legislate. No where in those enumerated powers is there any mention of domestic relations, or familial relations, or general police powers, or any other designation that would suggest a Federal power to regulate abortion. Thus, the States have plenary authority over the subject, just as the States enjoy plenary authority, within the obvious limits of the Constitution such as the first amendment, to regulate corporation and business association laws, property laws, trust and estates laws, insurance laws, and any other potential topic of legal concern outside of the specific Federal powers granted by the Constitution.

In recent debates, some Senators have attempted to redefine the concept of States rights which is as old as the Constitution in an effort to make this amendment appear to be something it is not. For the duration of our Republic, States rights has meant nothing more nor less than what our Constitution defines; namely, the extensive power of the States to govern within their constitutional jurisdiction as qualified by the power of the Federal Government to govern within its constitutional jurisdiction. This is the traditional, indeed, the only definition of States rights because it is the definition given by the defining document, the Constitution.

Those who would redefine the concept of States rights for the purposes of this debate maintain that this is not a States rights proposal because it permits the Federal Government to continue to act within the limits of its jurisdiction. Those who would redefine the concept of States rights overlook a most vital point. Allowing the Federal Government to act within its jurisdiction still does not authorize it to prohibit abortion. Although the Federal Government may exercise its authority to regulate interstate commerce in a manner that tangentially relates to abortion, that is, placing conditions on interstate transport of abortifacients, it still is not exercising any authority over abortion but only regulating interstate commerce.

As long as our Constitution has set up two tiers of government, the State and the Federal, to act within their specified parameters, there has been some limited interface between their respective powers. This is true of all matters reserved to the States, domestic relations, wills, criminal laws, and so forth, and all matters enumerated as within Federal control, interstate commerce, postal authorities, authority to coin money and raise armies, and so forth. The States, acting within their jurisdiction, may influence the Federal Government and vice versa. For instance, when some States legalized gambling, they had an obvious effect on interstate commerce, a Federal power. These tangential impacts on each other's authorities, however, are no reason to say that the States rights or the Federal rights have ceased to exist. Yet those who would redefine "States rights" using something other than the Constitution as their dictionary maintain that this is not a States rights amendment solely because the Federal Government may continue to operate within its jurisdiction. If this argument prevails, it will be a new and terribly sad chapter in our constitutional history.

Let me list again the reasons that this is undeniably a States rights amendment:

First, the amendment simply deprives the special constitutional right created by the Court in Roe versus Wade of any further legal significance. Thus, abortion would be henceforth regulated as it was prior to 1973; namely, within the reserved powers of the States.

Second, the legislative history of this amendment has stated repeatedly that our objective is to return to the legal status quo ante Roe when States governed the abortion questions. The States had enjoyed plenary power to set and alter their own abortion policies prior to Roe. Indeed, in the 5 years prior to Roe, 18 States had changed their abortion laws—all in the direction of more liberal allowance of abortion.

Third, by simply nullifying the right created in Roe, this amendment allows the Constitution to operate as it did before Roe to vest authority over abortion in the States. If Federal authorities possess some limited residual authority to the extent that some enumerated Federal power tangentially touches upon abortion policy, this limited residuum of authority is nothing that does not exist with regard to every other field of law under our Constitution.

Fourth, in the absence of special constitutional status for abortion, it would be treated as any other domestic relations law. The Supreme Court has clarified that treatment on numerous occasions:

> The whole subject of the domestic relations of husband and wife, parent and child, belongs to the laws of the States, and not to the laws of the United States.

In Re Burris (136 U.S. 586, 593 (1889)) This principle was reaffirmed in 1930, 1944, 1979.

Fifth, an alternative line of constitutional reasoning reaches the same result with respect to the extent of State authority in the absence of Roe. State power to set criminal standards is unquestioned. Justice Frankfurter explained:

> Broadly speaking, crimes in the United States are what the laws of the individual states make them, subject to the limitations of Art. I § 10, cl. 1 in the original Constitution prohibiting bills of attainder and ex post facto laws and of the Thirteenth and Fourteenth Amendments. Rochin v. Cal., 342 U.S. 165, 168 (1952.

With Roe overturned by this amendment, abortion would not be subject to the protections of the 14th amendment or any other provision of the Constitution. Accordingly, abortion misdemeanors, such as the States had enacted prior to 1973, would be again, "what the laws of the individual States make them." Id.

Sixth, finally, I state again for the record and as my intent as the author of this amendment in conjuction with Senator EAGLETON who shares my view on this point: We understand this amendment to restore to the States full authority to restrict, prohibit or refrain from restricting and prohibiting abortion. The Federal Government is to have no authority over abortion per se, but only authority within its established constitutional limits.

In summary, this is a States rights approach to the abortion controversy in the sense that anything under our Constitution can be said to be a States rights matter. Moreover beyond the terms of the Constitution, a popular understanding or misunderstanding of States rights has no meaning. Those who argue that this is not a States rights proposal have not consulted the document which defines all States rights, the Constitution.

THE FALLACIES OF ROE

If we are to judge the judgment of the judges in Roe, I propose now to examine their reading of history, law, the Constitution, and all other elements that influenced that decision. Based on a disinterested view of these factors, I can recommend without reservation that the Senate reject the abortion right created in Roe.

Before undertaking a more rigorous legal analysis of Roe, we might profit by measuring it against the basic tenets that animated the creation of our Republic. Those principles were articulated by Thomas Jefferson in the Declaration of Independence:

> We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights, that among these are Life, Liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. That to secure these rights, Governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed.

Thus, our infant Nation established the protection of human life as the foremost duty of government. Roe's blatant conflict with this fundamental national value is apparent. In the words of President Reagan, "We cannot diminish the value of one category of human life—the unborn—without diminishing the value of all human life" (Human Life Review, vol. IX, No. 2, page 8 (1983)).

Perhaps no act of government has conflicted more with the founding tenets of our Republic since the last infamous Supreme Court case that denied the value of certain human lives, the Dred Scott case. In both Dred Scott and Roe, one class of less-privileged human beings were denied the full protections of the Constitution. At length, the Dred Scott case was corrected by constitutional amendment. The correction of this Supreme Court error serve as an excellent analog for our consideration of the modern Dred Scott case, Roe versus Wade.

In the case of Roe versus Wade, a majority of seven on the Court identified for the first time in the Constitution's history a right to abortion within the terms of the 14th amendment. This right was sufficiently powerful to overturn the abortion restrictions of every single State in the Union. The right created in Roe, which even the Supreme Court has labeled the "right to abortion" Conn. v. Menillo (423 U.S. 9, 10) or the "right to an abortion" Singleton v. Wulff (428 U.S. 106, 115) has further proven strong enough to override most State attempts to place reasonable restraints on abortion practices. For example, the right to abortion has been invoked to strike down State statutes attempting to protect the child in a late abortion who might be born alive, Colautti v. Franklin (439 U.S. 379 (1979)); to void State statutes requiring use of the safest abortion techniques, Danforth (428 U.S. 52) to invalidate State statutes intended to give parents the ability to counsel with their minor children and give consent prior to an operation that deeply involves their minor child's physical and psychological health, Danforth, supra.; to hold that a 24-hour waiting period prior to performance of this medical procedure is unconstitutional, Akron versus Center, June 15, 1983, to declare that a father—although he has a constitutional right to share in procreating (Skinner v. Okla., 315 U.S. 535 (1942))—has no right whatsoever to protect the unborn child he has joined in procreating; and even to invalidate a State statute requiring abortions after the first term to be performed in hospitals, Akron, supra. Of course, the most important aspect of Roe is that it has established a regime of elective abortion in America.

ROE AS CONSTITUTIONAL LAW

Almost immediately after Roe was decided, criticism of the opinion began to emerge from the Nation's top jurisprudential and constitutional scholars. These renowned scholars charged that the Roe decision has no basis in constitutional law. In the words of Prof. John Hart Ely, Roe is:

A very bad decision . . . It is bad because it is bad constitutional law, or rather because it is not constitutional law and gives almost no sense of an obligation to try to be. 32 Yale L.R. 920 (1973).

Prof. Archibald Cox echoes this opinion when he asserts that:

Neither historian, layman, nor lawyer will be persuaded that all the details prescribed in Roe v. Wade are part of either natural law or the Constitution. The Role of the Supreme Court. (1976).

It is important to note as well what these scholars are not saying. They are not criticizing the Court for taking a controversial position on a sensitive issue, nor are they disputing the morality of legalized abortion. As a necessary consequence of its position in the legal system, the Supreme Court is often confronted with difficult questions in the context of legal dispute. In the words of Progessor Ely, these "difficult questions yield controversial answers." In most cases, however, the Constitution provides some guidance for the proper resolution of even the most controversial of these decisions. For example, the fourth amendment guarantees to all citizens, the innocent and guilty alike, freedom from unreasonable searches and seizures. This overriding value leads to controversial decisions involving restraints of police officers in the apprehension of criminals. While all may not agree with the Court's particular application of the fourth amendment, Professor Ely points out, one cannot easily make the claim that the Court's decision lacks any foundation in the Constitution.

In the case of Roe versus Wade however, Professor Ely notes, the claim is entirely justified, for the Constitution "simply says nothing, clear or fuzzy, about abortion." Nor is there any support whatever in the legislative history of the Constitution to warrant the conclusion that it was intended to secure a right to an abortion.

Despite the absence of constitutional warrant to find a right to abortion, Roe declares that the due process clause of the fourteenth amendment confers a right of privacy which includes the right of a woman to abort her offspring if she so chooses. Nowhere in the decision does the Court define the right of privacy; its only discussion of the subject is an assertion that the Constitution does not confer "an unlimited right to do with one's body as one pleases." Yet if the right of privacy does not entitle one to do with one's own body what one pleases, how can it be said to protect activity that ends the life of another member of the human species? Even if the human fetus is not a person in the whole sense of the law, Ely emphasizes, "it is certainly not nothing." Ely's aphorism illustrates an essential truth that should have been obvious to the Court—that, "there is nothing private about an abortion."

Although the right of privacy is not mentioned in the text of the Constitution, many legal scholars would agree that the courts may find such a right in the general values which certain specific provisions of the Constitution aim to protect. However, these scholars also stress that the right of privacy must be carefully defined and limited; thus, Professor Ely writes that it is entirely proper for a court to infer a general right of privacy, "so long as some care is taken in defining the sort of right the inference will support."

Roe however, provides neither a definition for the right to privacy nor an explanation of how that right is implicated by restrictions upon abortion. Rather, the Court simply declares that the right "is broad enough to encompass a woman's decision whether or not to terminate her pregnancy." Apparently, the Court thinks that this outcome is supported by the detriment imposed upon the pregnant woman by statutes which prohibit her from aborting her child. As Professor Ely notes, these detriments "ought to be taken very seriously." But, he adds, all this "has nothing to do with privacy in the Bill of Rights sense or any other the Constitution suggests." Whatever one's philosophical views on the issue, it is generally agreed that the Constitution does not provide such an unrestricted "right to privacy."

The irony of this aspect of the Roe decision was concisely articulated by Prof. John Noonan during our Constitution Subcommittee hearings on this amendment. He noted that, "for most of us what is private is what can be done alone, at home, or with anyone's family * * *. It would strike most people as bizarre that something so private as abortion is under Court rulings depends on and cannot be effected without public funding. Yet that is the announced position of the supporters of abortion." Hearings, October 5, 1981. Professor Noonan summarized his position on the connection of abortion to privacy by stating: "We can all agree that sexuality is private and reproduction is private, but when it comes to taking the life of the unborn we are no longer in the domain of the private. We are dealing with a social act—what is now a social act amounting to an American atrocity."

In her recent dissent to the Akron case, Justice Sandra Day O'Connor recognized other fallacies in Roe. Justice O'Connor pointed out that the Roe Court identified a legitimate State interest in protecting "the potentiality of human life" (410 U.S. 149, 150). She approved this finding, but questioned how the Court could ignore the implications of their own conclusion: "I agree completely that the State has these interests, but in my view, the point at which these interests become compelling does not depend on the trimester of pregnancy. Rather these interests are present throughout pregnancy." Akron, page 8 of dissent.

With clarity and skill, Justice O'Connor thus exposes the arbitrariness of the Roe Court's trimester framework. Under the Roe opinion, the State may not make laws to protect "potential human life" until the third trimester. Yet if the Court acknowledges the presence of "potential human life" worthy of State protection in the third trimester, why not protect that same "potential human life" a day before the third trimester? In the words of Justice O'Connor, "potential life is no less potential in the first weeks of pregnancy than it is at viability or afterward. At any stage of pregnancy, there is the potential for human life." To those who might argue that the third trimester is the point of viability—a questionable point with advancing medical technology—and thus a logical place to grant the States authority to protect unborn life, Justice O'Connor poses the same unanswerable dilemma: "the choice of viability as the point at which the State interest in potential life becomes compelling is no less arbitrary than choosing any point before viability or any point afterward." If indeed the Court were compelled to choose some arbitrary point to demark when States could legally protect human life, it would seem far more logical to choose the earliest possible point to grant the maximum possible protection to the value identified by the Declaration of Independence as the primary purpose for the formation of government; namely, the protection of human life. In the words of President Reagan, "Doesn't the constitutional protection of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness extend to the unborn unless it can be proven beyond a shadow of a doubt that life does not exist?" Address to National Religious Broadcasters, January 31, 1983.

Justice O'Connor also explained a second major flaw in the Roe reasoning; namely, the trimester formula of Roe has "no justification in law or logic." Akron dissent at 8. The Roe decision dividing the term of pregnancy into three equal parts is necessarily tied to the current state of medical technology. Viability, the point at which an infant can live outside the womb and a State may legislate to protect the unborn, is clearly pushed back as technology advances. Even the Court has acknowledged the "flexibility of that term." Danforth (428 U.S. at 64). At the same time, advances in medical technology have made abortions generally safer and have reduced the State's authority to require hospitalization or other safety regulations. Akron, supra. Thus, as the Justice points out, Roe's framework "is clearly on a collision course with itself. As the medical risks of various abortion procedures decrease, the point at which the State may regulate for reasons of maternal health is moved further forward to actual childbirth. As medical science becomes better able to provide for the separate existence of the fetus, the point of viability is moved further back toward conception." Akron dissent at 7. Justice O'Connor is correct: The logic of this framework is difficult to assert.

The logic is not the only flaw of this trimester breakdown, however. Its legal wisdom is also lacking. To be predictable and enforceable, the law should demonstrate some degree of continuity over time. Under the Roe formulation, the States must continually guess about the current state of the medical art and other factors that could cause their authority to legislate to fluctuate. For a conscientious legislature, the Roe decision imparts no sure standard as to the limits of their authority. Justice O'Connor explained the uncertainty imposed upon the legislatures in these terms: "Although legislatures are better suited to make the necessary factual judgments in this area, the Court's framework forces legislatures, as a matter of constitutional law, to speculate about what constitutes 'accepted medical practice' at any given time. Without the necessary expertise or ability, courts must then pretend to act as science review boards and examine those legislative judgments." Akron dissent at 7.

While these arguments are compelling, they are by no means the only attacks on the reasoning of Roe. Perhaps I could simply list a few more of the unanswered questions raised by Roe:

The question of when life begins, according to the Court, is beyond the competency of the judiciary to answer. Nevertheless the Court effectively answers the question for the legislatures and citizens of all 50 States by declaring that States can protect unborn life only after "viability."

The Court conceded that if the unborn were "persons" they would be afforded 14th amendment protections. Yet both reasons the Court offers for rejecting the "personhood" of the unborn were wholly inadequate. In the first place, the Court suggests that none of the other uses of the term "person" in the Constitution appear to apply to the unborn. As a matter of fact, however, none of the other uses of the term appear to apply to anyone under the age of 24. All other uses of the term apply to adults. Surely adolescents could not thus be stripped of personhood. The second reason given by the Court is the absence of case law indicating the unborn should be persons. This only proves a well-known fact: This question was before the Court for the first time. It is unseemly that an issue which could have disposed of the case was given such shallow consideration.

Although the Court maintained that it could not determine when life begins, it nonetheless divided a pregnancy into three separate trimesters with different legal implications for each subdivision. One looks in vain for any reasoning from constitutional, legal, or scientific sources for a guiding principle underlying this division process.

When finding a right to privacy, the Court employed imagination and innovation to find a never-before-identified right to abortion within the due process clause of the 14th amendment; when finding "person" does not include the unborn, the Court was literalistic to a fault. Without reaching the merits of appropriate judicial construction techniques, vascillating between two extremes inspires little confidence that the decision was based solely upon purely neutral criteria of constitutional interpretation.

Even if the unborn have no rights under the 14th amendment, this is irrelevant to the question of whether a State may restrict abortion. Professor Ely uses a particularly enlightening analogy to illustrate this point:

> Dogs are not "persons in the whole sense" nor have they constitutional rights, but that does not mean the state cannot prohibit killing them: It does not even mean the state cannot prohibit killing them in the exercise of the First Amendment right of political protest.

LEGAL CONTEST OF ROE

The Supreme Court's decision in Roe versus Wade, should be viewed in its proper legal and historical context. The Court's sweeping decision resulting in abortion on demand is clearly in opposition to the treatment of abortion at common law, early American abortion laws, laws enacted by the legislative bodies of the States at the time of the decision, and even the abortion laws of most other countries of the world.

ABORTION AT COMMON LAW

After reviewing the development of abortion as a crime at common law, relying heavily on the analysis of Prof. Cyril H. Means, an advocate of legalized abortion, the majority in Roe concluded:

> It is thus apparent that at common law, at the time of the adoption of our Constitution, and throughout the major portion of the 19th Century, abortion was viewed with less disfavor than under most American statutes currently in effect. Phrasing it another way, a woman enjoyed a substantially broader right to terminate a pregnancy than she does in most States today. 410 U.S. at 140.

The Court's treatment of the development of abortion as a crime at common law has been severely and repeatedly criticized for both its conclusions and its uncritical acceptance of the common-law analysis of Professor Means. See, for example, Byrn, "An American Tragedy: The Supreme Court on Abortion" (41 Fordham L. Rev. 807 (1973)); "Abortion and the Constitution: The Need for a Life-Protective Amendment" (63 Calif. L. Rev. 1250 (1975)). It is not necessary at this time for me to engage in an exhaustive analysis of the treatment of abortion as a crime at common law. It is enough simply to point out that the majority's sweeping decision in Roe was clearly contrary to the way abortion was viewed at common law, with respect not only to maternal health but also to the protection of the life of the fetus.

In the 13th century, Bracton wrote that abortion by blow or poison was homicide if the fetus was "already formed and animated, and particularly if it be animated." (2. H. Bracton, De Legibus et Consuetudinibus Angliae 29 (Twiss ed. 1879)). Another authority later in that century, Fleta, also condemned abortion of a "formed and animated" fetus as homicide. "Justificable abortion—Medical and Legal Foundations" (49 Geo. L.J. 395, 431 (1961)). At that time, biologists taught that a new life came into being when the fetus assumed recognizable human form, which was thought to occur 40 days after conception. See Means, "The Law of New York Concerning Abortion and the Status of the Fetus, 1664-1968: A Case of Cessation of Constitutionality" (14 N.Y.L.F. 411,411-12 (1968)).

A difficulty encountered with the abortion crime at common law was the impossibility of proving the cause of the child's death. This severe evidentiary problem led to a paucity of indictments for abortion and led some 16th century writers to conclude that, as a practical matter, abortion was not a crime (Modern L. Rev. 203 (1937)). Seventeenth century abortion reform tried to resolve the proof problem by declaring that an abortion was murder if the child was born alive with marks of the abortion and then died. If the child was stillborn, there was no murder because it could not be known "whether the child was living at the time of the batterie or not, or if the batterie was the cause of the death . . ." R. v. Sims (75 Eng. Rep. 1075 (K.B. 1601)).

Coke attempted, later in the 17th century, to resolve the problem further, and, in so doing, again indicated the concern the common law attached to the life of the fetus—a concern which Roe totally abandoned:

If a woman be quick with childe, and by a Potion or otherwise killeth it in her wombe; or if a man beat her, whereby the childe dieth in her body, and she is delivered of a dead childe, this is a great misprision, and no murder; but if the childe be born alive, and dieth of the Potion, battery, or other cause, this is murder: for in the law it is accounted a reasonable creature, in rerum natura, when it is born alive. E. Coke, Third Institute 50 (1664).

The majority in Roe, relying on Professor Means' interpretation of the sketchy reports of two cases from 1327 and 1348 (three centuries before Coke wrote), suggested that Coke was either mistaken or intentionally misstated the status of abortion as a common law crime (410 U.S. at 134). Other commentators such as Byrn and Destro strongly dispute Means' analysis of those cases and suggest that the cases stand for the opposite conclusion. The great common law scholars clearly indicated that abortion was a crime with respect, at the very least, to a quick fetus. Blackstone stated:

Life is the immediate gift of God, a right inherent by nature in every individual; and it begins in contemplation of law as soon as an infant is able to stir in the mother's womb. For if a woman is quick with child, and by a potion or otherwise, killeth it in her womb; or if any one beat her, whereby the child dieth in her body, and she is delivered of a dead child; this, though not murder, was by the ancient law homicide or manslaughter. . . . But (Coke) doth not look upon this offence in quite so atrocious a light but merely as a heinous misdemeanor. Black's Law Dictionary, 5th Ed. (1979) at 1122.

Finally, as Blackstone indicated, the common law recognized the life of the fetus at the time of quickening. The first English abortion statute, recognizing this understanding of human generation, provided for greater penalties for an abortion of a woman "quick with child" than a woman "not being, or not being proved to be, quick with child" (43 Geo. 3 ch. 58 and 2 (1803)). This statute was changed by a new statute, enacted in 1837, which imposed a penalty for all abortional acts without distinction (7 Will. 4 and 1 Vict., c. 85 (1837)). A possible motive for this change was the discovery of the ovum, and a more accurate idea of the nature of conception, in 1827.

The decision in Roe, which, as discussed previously, eliminated any consideration for the life of the fetus, was clearly contrary to the thrust of the common law understanding of abortion.

NINETEENTH CENTURY AMERICAN ABORTION LAW

The abortion law in effect in this country, in most States, until the mid-19th century was derived from English common law (410 U.S. at 138). While the vast majority of the States retained the common-law distinction that abortion before quickening was not a crime, no State held that there was no crime of abortion after quickening (Bryn at 827). Later in the 19th century, several States interpreted the common law to mean that abortion was a crime at any time during pregnancy. For example, Mills v. Commonwealth (13 Pa. 630 (1850)).

Almost all of the States enacted abortion statutes during the 19th century. (See 410 U.S. at 175-76 notes 1 and 2 (dissenting opinion). Connecticut adopted the first State abortion statute in 1821 (Conn. Stat. Tit. 20, § 14 (1821)). The Connecticut statute retained the quickening distinction for the abortion crime. Quickening, however, soon began to disappear as the practical distinction to determine criminality. The intention behind enactment of these statutes is illustrated by the Maine Supreme Court which, in interpreting the Maine statute, abrogated the quickening requirement in the abortion crime; the court pointed out that if the pleading did not allege the destruction of the child, it would be fatally defective for not charging the essential element of the crime, State v. Smith (33 Me. 48, 60 (1851)).

In 1859, the American Medical Association Committee on Criminal Abortion criticized the quickening distinction in criminal abortion laws for the "grave defects of our laws, both common and statute, as regards the independent and actual existence of the child before birth, as a living being," and called upon State legislatures to revise their abortion laws (12 Transactions of the Am. Med. Assn. 73-78 (1859)). This position of the AMA seems to have had its impact because during this period many States abolished the requirement that an abortion had to follow quickening to be a crime. At the time of the ratification of the 14th amendment, in 1868, at least 28 of the 37 States had made abortions before quickening a crime (Quay at 447-520). In the next 15 years, seven more of these States incriminated prequickening abortional acts. By 1871, the AMA could quote with approval from Archbold's Criminal Practice and Pleadings with regard to the new consensus:

It was generally supposed that the foetus becomes animated at the period of quickening; but this idea is exploded. Physiology considers the foetus as much a living being immediately after conception as at any other time before delivery, and its future progress as the development and increase of those constituent principles which it then received. It considers quickening as a mere adventitious event. . . . Indeed, no other doctrine appears to be consonant with reason or physiology but that which admits the embryo to possess vitality from the very moment of conception. 22 Transactions of the Am. Med. Assn. 250 (1871).

Further evidence that at least one motivation behind these laws was the protection of the life of the fetus, is seen in several court decisions interpreting these statutes.

We hold that the anti-abortion statutes in Oklahoma were enacted and designed for the protection of the unborn child and through it society. Bowlan v. Lunsford, v76 Okla. 115 (1936).

Thus, again, the Court's decision in Roe, resulting in a practical situation of abortion on demand, was clearly contrary to the early American law on abortion.

STATE ABORTION LAWS AT THE TIME OF ROE

The Supreme Court's decision in Roe held every State's criminal abortion statute unconstitutional (410 U.S. at 118, note 2).

Between 1967 and 1972, most of the State legislatures had considered changing their abortion laws. Nineteen States did make changes in their abortion law (1972 Univ. of Illinois L.F. 177). All of these 19 States changed their law to permit abortion to prevent grave health damage to the mother. In addition, some of the States permitted abortions when the unborn child was conceived in rape or incest, or where the child would be born with substantial deformity. Four States required no grounds at all. But all States limited abortions in terms of age of the fetus; for example, Washington had a limit of 4 lunar months.

The other 31 States did not change their abortion law despite the fact that abortion legislation was introduced in most of them. In two States, Michigan and North Dakota, proposed liberalized abortion statutes were rejected by referendum—by majorities of 61 and 77 percent respectively. In 21 of the States, the abortion statutes in effect in 1868, the year the 14th amendment was ratified, were still in effect at the time of the Roe decision (410 U.S. at 176 note 2).

In sum, no State—including the four States which allowed abortion on demand—made abortion legal for the entire 9 months. None of the States had abortion laws as expansive as that created by the Court in Roe versus Wade.

INTERNATIONAL ABORTION LAW

Not only was the Court's creation of an abortion right more permissive than the law that had been enacted by the representatives of the people of the 50 States, but the abortion right found in Roe was one of the most permissive in the world.

In 1981, according to one study, the United States was one of 7 percent of the countries of the world in which something approximating abortion on demand was legal (Tietze, Induced Abortion: A World Review (1981) (The Population Council)). But the current status of abortion in the United States may be more extreme than that figure indicates since many of the other countries in that category have enforceable time limits on the legal availability or abortions. Other countries in this category include the U.S.S.R., the People's Republic of China, Denmark, France, Singapore, Sweden, Yugoslavia, and Vietnam. The vast majority of countries of the world have at least some effective legal control over the performing of abortions. As Prof. Richard Stith has observed about Roe versus Wade:

As a teacher of comparative law, I find this decision unique in the world. No other modern domestic state or foreign nation has ever, to my knowledge, privatized the value of new human life to this degree. No one, except our Court has ever left the unborn entirely without public protection for the first six months of gestation, and with only nominal protection even just before birth. Moreover, this extremist position has been imposed on our country not as a matter of temporary legislative experimentation, but by practically unchangeable judicial fiat—and this with scarcely any principled basis in the Constitution. Senate hearings, November 12, 1981, Professor Richard Stith, Valparaiso University School of Law.

Indeed, the single judicial decision in Western law which is most directly comparable to Roe on terms of the issues presented has come to almost diametrically opposite conclusions. In 1975, the Federal Constitutional Court of West Germany handed down its own decision on abortion, in which the majority opinion of the court (A) accepted as fact the position that human life exists at least within a few days after conception, (B) rejected the view that this life could legitimately be classified as having little or no value under the law, and (C) invalidated as unconstitutional a policy of unrestricted abortion during the first 3 months of pregnancy. See generally, Robert Jonas and John Gorby, "West German Abortion Decision: A Contrast to Roe v. Wade" (9 John Marshall, J. Practice and Procedure (1976)).

Thus, it can be seen that the Court's decision in Roe versus Wade had a devastating impact on existing law. This far-reaching decision was clearly contrary to at least part of the purpose behind the treatment of abortion as a crime at common law and the development of 19th century abortion law in America. The abortion right found in Roe was broader than any existing State abortion law, and, finally, was one of the most permissive, if not the most permissive, in the world.

I have attempted only to portray some flavor of the jurisprudential criticism that has been directed at the Roe and Doe decisions. In large part, this criticism has come from individuals who do not look with disfavor upon the substantive policies generated by these decisions. They simply question how these policies came suddenly to be mandated by a Constitution that had never been thought prior to 1973 to contain anything approaching the "rights" set forth in Roe and Doe. As Professor Ely again has observed:

What is frightening about Roe is that this super-protected right [to abortion] is not inferable from the language of the Constitution, the Framers thinking respecting the specific problem in issue, any general value derivable from the provisions they included, or the Nation's governmental structure. . . . At times the inferences the Court has drawn from the values the Constitution marks for special protection have been controversial, even shaky, but never before has its sense of an obligation to draw one been so obviously lacking. Ely at 935–7.

As Professor Epstein has similarly concluded, the Roe decision is "symptomatic of the analytical poverty possible in constitutional litigation" (Epstein at 184).

Among other constitutional scholars who have been sharply critical of the jurisprudence in Roe are the late Alexander Bickely of the Yale Law School, Arthur Miller of the Harvard Law School, Harry Wellington, former dean of the Yale Law School, and Archibald Cox, former Solicitor General of the United States (A. Bickel, The Morality of Consent (1975)).

Perhaps even more compelling criticism of the Roe decision, however, has come from the Justices themselves who were in dissent in that case. In a dissent far stronger than normally seen on the Supreme Court, Justice White stated:

I find nothing in the language or history of the Constitution to support the Court's judgment. The Court simply fashions a new constitutional right for pregnant mothers and, with scarcely any reason or authority for its action invests that right with sufficient substance to override most existing State abortion statutes. The upshot is that the people and the legislatures of the 50 States are constitutionally disentitled to weigh the relative importance of the continued existence and development of the fetus, on the one hand, against a spectrum of possible impacts on the mother, on the other hand. As an exercise of raw judicial power, the Court perhaps has authority to do what it does today; but in my view its judgment is an improvident and extravagant exercise of the power of judicial review which the Constitution extends to this Court. 410 U.S. at 221–22 (Justice White dissenting).

Justice Rehnquist similarly observed:

The decision here to break the term of pregnancy into three distinct terms and to outline the permissible restrictions the State may impose in each one, for example, partakes more of judicial legislation than it does of a determination of the intent of the drafters of the Fourteenth Amendment. 410 U.S. at 174 (Justice Rehnquist dissenting).

While fully respecting the authority of the Supreme Court to interpret the provisions of the Constitution, supporters of this amendment recognize also the authority reposed in Congress under article V of the Constitution to amend the document in response to what it views as wrongful or inappropriate decisions. To this end, this amendment amends the Constitution to overcome the effects of Roe versus Wade and its progeny and to restore authority in the States to legislate with regard to the practice of abortion.

PROGENY OF ROE

As I have mentioned earlier, Roe versus Wade and Doe versus Bolton created for the first time in the Constitution's history an enforceable right to abortion which overturns the abortion laws of every State in the Union. These Supreme Court cases basically opined that the right to seek an abortion is a fundamental liberty, one of those handful of rights so sacred that any State regulations of the right must show a compelling justification. This standard of judicial review is so strict that very few, and only very inconsequential, limitations on the court-created right have been held constitutionally sufficient in the decade since Roe.

The subsequent development of the abortional right promulgated by the Court in Roe versus Wade has largely been one of expansion of the right to its fullest possible limits through the gradual elimination of virtually all possible impediments to its exercise. Review of the opinions of the Court which followed Roe versus Wade demonstrates this development.

In Doe versus Bolton, the Court invalidated, on 14th amendment grounds, various procedural requirements contained in a recently enacted criminal abortion statute of the State of Georgia. Before reaching these procedural aspects of the statute, the Court considered and upheld against a vagueness challenge the requirement that the physician find the abortion to be "necessary" (410 U.S. at 191–192). Citing its decision in United States v. Vuitch (402 U.S. 62, 71–72 (1971)), the Court found that such a standard left latitude for the physician to consider all factors relating to "health" and therefore was within the ambit of "judgment[s] that physicians are obviously called upon to make routinely whenever surgery is considered" (410 U.S. at 192). The broad applicability of the term "health" as the Court defined it—

Allows the attending physician the room he needs to make his best medical judgment. And it is room that operates for the benefit, not the disadvantage, of the pregnant woman (410 U.S. at 192).

The Court found the statute's requirement that permissible abortions be performed in hospitals accredited by the Joint Commission on Accreditation of Hospitals was constitutionally invalid on the ground that such requirement was not "based on differences that are reasonably related to the purpose of the act in which it is found" (410 U.S. at 194). The Court recognized the permissibility of the States adopting standards for the licensing of all facilities where abortions may be performed after the first trimester so long as the standards are legitimately related to permissible State objectives. Nevertheless, it felt compelled to agree with the appellants that the State had failed to justify a requirement that such abortions be performed in a licensed hospital, as opposed to a facility—such as a clinic—with all staffing and services necessary to perform abortions safely—including means of handling complications (id. at 195). The Court also found the hospital requirement per se invalid because of its failure to exclude the first trimester of pregnancy (id.).

The Court also struck down the Georgia statute's requirements of prior approval of an abortion by both a committee of the hospital's medical staff in which the operation is to be performed and two other licensed physicians. It found such requirements to be "basically redundant" and without rational connection to a patient's needs, as well as unduly restrictive of the physician's right to practice (id. at 197, 199). The statute's requirement of residency within the State was found to be unrelated to any legitimate State interest—such as conservation of limited State-supported medical resources for residents of the State (id. at 200). In short, the compelling State interest test operated to invalidate State limitations on abortion. In the dissenting voice of Justice White:

> The common claim before us is that for any one of such reasons, or for no reason at all, and without asserting or claiming any threat to life or health, any women is entitled to an abortion at her request if she is able to find a medical advisor willing to undertake the procedure. The Court for the most part sustains this position.

The Court next adverted to the matter of abortion in a very different context. In Bigelow v. Virginia (421 U.S. 809 (1975)), the Court considered a Virginia statute which had made it a misdemeanor for any person to encourage or promote the procuring of abortion or miscarriage by publication, lecture, advertisement or sale or circulation of any publication, or in any other manner. In 1971, before the decision in Roe versus Wade, the appellant had been convicted under the statute for running an advertisement in a Virginia newspaper which advised its readers of the availability of legal abortions in New York and supplied the particulars as to whom to contact for assistance in obtaining an abortion. The Court held that the kind of speech involved, notwithstanding its commercial character, was fully protected under the first amendment. Relying upon its holding in Roe versus Wade, the Court further justified its holding upon the ground that "the activity advertised pertained to constitutional interests" (id. at 822).

Justice Rehnquist pointed out the inconsistencies in the majority opinion by noting that the primary reason the advertisement is given more constitutional protection than other commercial speech is that the ad related to "abortion, elevated to constitutional stature by the Court." Rehnquist further captured the inconsistency by noting that if the first amendment were the only basis for the holding, the subject matter of the ad ought not to make any difference.

In Connecticut v. Menillo (423 U.S. 9 (1975)), the Court corrected a misunderstanding of the scope of its holding in Roe versus Wade which had arisen in the highest courts of some States. In reliance on certain language in Roe versus Wade, the Supreme Court of Connecticut had held that State's criminal abortion statute to be "null and void" in its entirety, so as to preclude its enforcement even against a nonphysician who had attempted to procure an abortion (id. at 9–10). Upon appeal by the State, the Supreme Court explained in a per curiam opinion that it had not held the Texas statute involved in Roe versus Wade to be unenforceable against a nonphysician abortionist "for the case did not present the issue" (423 U.S. at 10). Rather, the Court indicated, the "right to an abortion" recognized in Roe versus Wade was entirely contingent upon its being performed by a competent licensed physician under conditions insuring maximum safety for the woman (id. at 11).

In Planned Parenthood of Central Missouri v. Danforth (428 U.S. 52 (1976)), a case which it described as "a logical and anticipated corollary to Roe versus Wade * * *, and Doe versus Bolton (id. at 55), the Court dealt with some of the secondary issues which were forecast and reserved in those earlier opinions. At issue were various provisions of a comprehensive statute for the control and regulation of abortion which was passed by the Missouri Legislature in 1974, shortly after invalidation of its previous abortion legislation under the authority of Roe versus Wade (id. at 55–56).

The portion of the statute which defined "viability" as "that stage of fetal development when the life of the unborn child may be continued indefinitely outside the womb by natural or artificial life-supportive systems" was held not to circumvent, or be violative of, the limitations on State regulation outline in Roe versus Wade (id. at 63–65). The Court rejected the appellants' contentions that the statutory definition was defective by reason of its lack of reference to a gestational time period or the three stages of pregnancy, and its use of the term "indefinitely." It found that the prescribing of a specific point in the gestation period as the point of viability is not the function of the courts or legislatures, but, rather, that the determination that a particular fetus is viable is a matter for the professional judgment of the "responsible attending physician" (id. at 64–65).

The Court upheld a requirement of the statute that the woman, prior to submitting to an abortion during the first 12 weeks of pregnancy, certify her consent to the procedure in writing and that such consent be "informed" and freely given and not the result of coercion (id. at 67). The Court invalidated, however, the statute's requirements of prior written consent to an abortion within the first 12 weeks of pregnancy by the spouse or by one parent—or a person in loco parentis—of an unmarried minor under the age of 18 years. In both instances, that of spouse or parent, the Court took the position that any power a family member might have to veto a contemplated abortion would have to be a delegation of State power. Under this analysis, the Court concluded that the State could not delegate such a power to spouse or parents because it lacked the power itself (428 U.S. at 70, 74). While recognizing the "deep and proper concern and interest" of a husband "in his wife's pregnancy and in the growth and development of the fetus she is carrying," the Court found that in cases of disagreement a wife's decision must govern because "the view of only one of the two marriage partners can prevail. Inasmuch as it is the woman who physically bears the child and who is the more directly and immediately affected by the pregnancy, as between the two, the balance weighs in her favor" (id. at 69, 71).

Three dissenting Justices noted that the Court had assumed the State was delegating power it did not possess. Instead the State was trying to protect the interest of the father in preserving the life of his offspring. "A father's interest in having a child—perhaps his only child—may be unmatched by any other interest in his life" (428 U.S. at 93).

While reiterating the principle that "minors, as well as adults, are protected by the Constitution and possess constitutional rights," the Court also gave recognition to the State's "somewhat broader authority to regulate the activities and children than of adults" (id. at 74). Nevertheless, weighing the State's interests in the safeguarding of the family unit and of parental authority against the right of privacy of the "competent minor mature enough to have become pregnant," the Court found that it could not conclude that "providing a parent with absolute power to override a determination made by the physician and his minor patient, to terminate the patient's pregnancy will serve to strengthen the family unit" or that "such veto power will enhance parental authority or control where the minor and the nonconsenting parent are so fundamentally in conflict and the very existence of the pregnancy already has fractured the family structure" (id. at 75).

The dissent again raised questions. In their view, the parental consent statute merely protected the decision to have an abortion. Minors may not have the capacity to make such decisions in their best interest without parental involvement. States have traditionally sought to protect children from their own immature decisions by requiring parental consent.

The Court also found unconstitutional the statute's prohibition of the use of saline amniocentesis as a method of abortion after the first 12 weeks of pregnancy (id. at 75-79). This requirement of the statute had been based upon an express legislative finding that such technique was deleterious to maternal health (id. at 76). But the Court rejected the validity of this finding based upon its own assessment of the record. A majority of the Justices found that prostaglandin injection—apparently the only indisputably safer abortion technique for the woman—was not in fact generally available in the State of Missouri. Thus, the practical effect of the prohibition was, by forcing the woman and her physician to terminate her pregnancy by methods more dangerous to her health, to inhibit unreasonably or arbitrarily the vast majority of abortions after the first 12 weeks of pregnancy (id. at 78-79, 101-02).

Another provision of the statute required the physician performing an abortion to exercise the same degree of care to preserve the life of an aborted fetus as would be exercised if the fetus had been intended to be born alive. Both criminal—manslaughter—and civil liability were imposed if the physician failed to take measures "to encourage or sustain the life of the child, and the death of the child results" (id. at 82). The Court held the provision to be invalid by virtue of its failure to limit its applicability to the period after the viability stage has been reached (id. at 83). The dissent noted that read in any way except through a microscope, this section was only meant to apply to fetuses capable of surviving outside the womb, the requirement imposed by Roe.

The Court was presented with another State statute requiring parental consent for an abortion to be performed on a minor in Bellotti v. Baird (Bellotti 1") (428 U.S. 132 (1976)). The Massachusetts statute involved there required the consent of both parents, as well as the pregnant minor, for any abortion to be performed on an unmarried minor under the age of 18, but it also allowed for substituted consent by a judge of the superior court of the commonwealth, after hearing, "for good causes shown," if one or both parents refused to consent (id. at 134-35). The attorney general of Massachusetts urged that the statute was not one which allowed the parents to veto their minor child's decision to have an abortion solely on the ground of their own preferences. Rather, it was urged, it merely gives preference to parental consultation and consent, but permits a mature minor capable of giving informed consent to obtain a court order permitting an abortion without parental consent or consultation, and allows a minor not capable of giving informed consent to obtain an order without parental consultation where there is a showing that an abortion would be in her best interests (id. at 144-45). Accepting the proffered interpretation as one which might very well be applied by the courts of Massachusetts, and as one which would not unduly burden the right to seek an abortion, the Court decided the case was a proper one for abstention. So long as the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts could interpret the statute so as not to unduly burden the abortion decision, in a manner consistent with the interpretation proffered by the Massachusetts attorney general, review of the constitutional issues would be, the court felt, unnecessary (id. at 148).

In Beal v. Doe (432 U.S. 438 (1977)), the Court was presented with the issue of whether title XIX of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. § 1396 et seq. (1970 ed. and Supp V)), which establishes the Medicaid Program, requires participating States to fund the cost of nontherapeutic abortions. Under Pennsylvania's federally approved Medicaid plan, financial assistance for abortions was to be provided only upon certification by physicians that same were "medically necessary" (432 U.S. at 441). Fastening upon the distinction between necessary and unnecessary medical treatment, as well as the State's "valid and important interest in encouraging childbirth," the Court held that, absent a clear mandate in the language or legislative history of title XIX, there was no federally imposed obligation upon the States to fund nontherapeutic abortions (id. at 444-46).

In the companion case, Maher v. Roe, (432 U.S. 464 (1977)), the Court considered the related question of whether the Constitution requires a participating State which pays for childbirth to pay also for nontherapeutic abortions. Similarly to the Pennsylvania regulation involved in Beal, Connecticut Medicaid regulation limited benefits for first trimester abortions to those that were "medically necessary." The regulation was challenged on the ground that it violated the equal protection clause of the 14th amendment. The Court held that notwithstanding its impact on indigent women desiring abortions, the regulations involved no discrimination against a suspect class.

> [T]his Court has never held that financial need alone identifies a suspect class for purposes of equal protection analysis (id. at 471).

The Court further held that the regulation placed no obstacles in the pregnant woman's decision to abort, and thus did not impinge upon the fundamental right recognized in Roe versus Wade.

> The State may have made childbirth a more attractive alternative, thereby influencing the woman's decision, but it has imposed no restriction on access to abortions that was not already there (id. at 474)

In support of its holding, the Court emphasized that it was not retreating from its holding in Roe and its progeny, but that—

> [T]here is a basic difference between direct state interference with protected activity and state encouragement of an alternative activity consonant with legislative policy . . . /A/ State is not required to show a compelling interest for its policy choice to favor normal childbirth (Id. at 475, 477).

Although the State did not have a similar requirement of a showing of medical necessity for other medical procedures, the Court upheld the validity of the distinction, since such procedures "do not involve the termination of a potential human life." Id. at 480.

In a decision issued on the same day as Beal and Maher, the Court, in Poelker v. Doe, 432 U.S. 519 (1977), gave consideration to the refusal by the city of St. Louis to provide publicly financed hospital services for nontherapeutic abortions. Finding the constitutional principle involved to be identical with that involved in Maher, the Court found no constitutional violation by the city in electing, as a matter of policy, to provide public hospital services for childbirth while denying such services for nontherapeutic abortions.

The Court returned to the matter of State statutes which impose a standard of care on persons performing an abortion in Colautti v. Franklin, 439 U.S. 379 (1979). A Pennsylvania statute required that every person who performs an abortion make a determination of whether or not the fetus is viable and, upon a finding of actual or possible viability, exercise the same duty of care to preserve the fetus' life and health as if the fetus had been intended to be born alive. The statute also required the use of the abortion technique most conducive to the fetus being born alive so long as a different technique is not necessary to preserve the mother's life or health.

The Court found the viability determination requirement of the statute to be constitutionally void for vagueness. Id. at 390. If found a double ambiguity in the statute. The first ambiguity was found to flow from the statute's requirement that the prescribed standard of care be applied where there is "sufficient reason to believe that the fetus may be viable." This phraseology, the Court found, left unclear whether the determining factor was to be the physician's subjective judgment or "the perspective of a cross section of the medical community or a panel of experts." Id. at 391. The second ambiguity stemmed from the statute's use of the phrase "may be viable." The Court found that it could not merely mean "viable" since the statute used that term in juxtaposition to "may be viable". If one term—"viable" or "may be viable"—meant "viable" as the term used in Roe against Wade, the Court felt, the other term could be construed to relate to some other indeterminate stage of fetal development. Id. at 392-93. These uncertainties, the Court felt, left the physician subject to potential criminal liability predicated on "confusing and ambiguous criteria." Id. at 394.

The Court also held the standard-of-care provision itself to be impermissibly vague. Id. at 397-401. The defect was found to flow from the provision's failure to make clear which interest is dominant, that of the mother or that of the fetus, or whether the physician is required to make a "tradeoff" between the two interests. Such a conflict of duties, the Court felt, requires the State to proceed with greater precision. Id. at 400-01. The three dissenters noted that Roe had allowed States to protect the unborn after viability, but this ruling withdrew a substantial measure of the State's ability to protect fetal life in the third trimester.

Bellotti v. Baird ("Bellotti II") 443 U.S. 622 (1979), returned to the Court in 1979. On the basis of rulings by the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts construing various aspects of the statute, the Court found the statute to be unduly burdensome to the right to seek an abortion and, therefore, unconstitutional. Four of the Justices were of the opinion that if a State decides to require parental consent for a minor's abortion decision, it must, in order to ensure that the requirement for parental consent does not in fact confer on the parents an "absolute, and possible arbitrary veto," also make available an alternative judicial procedure whereby authorization may be obtained. Id, at 643-44. The Massachusetts statute, as construed by the State's highest court, failed they held, to meet these requisites in two respects: First by virtue, of its requirement that in all events the minor seek parental consent, id. at 646-48, and second to the extent it allowed the State court to disregard the abortion decision of a minor who has been determined to be mature and fully competent to assess the implications of the choice she has made based upon its own assessment of the best interests of the minor. Id. at 649-50. With respect to the first defect, the minor must have, the Justices felt, the opportunity to go directly to court without first consulting or notifying her parents, and the court must authorize her to act without parental consultation or consent if it finds her mature and well-informed enough to intelligently make the decision to abort. Id. at 647. If it finds her not to be competent to make such decision independently, she must nevertheless be permitted to show that an abortion would be in her best interests, and if the court is persuaded, it must order the abortion. Id. at 647-48. Once again the Court rejected any notion that minors heed parental consultation if the abortion decision is to be meaningful.

The Court turned again to the issue of abortion funding in 1980 in the companion cases of Harris v. McRae, 100 S. Ct. 2671 (1980), and Williams v. Zbaraz, 100 S. Ct. 2694 (1980). Harris involved challenges to the continuing prohibitions by Congress—usually referred to as the "Hyde amendment"—since 1976 to the use of Federal funds to reimburse the cost of abortion under the Medicaid Program except in certain specified circumstances. Several pregnant women and others challenged the Hyde amendment as violative of the due process clause of the fifth amendment and the religion clauses of the first amendment of the Constitution. It was also contended that despite the Federal funding restrictions, the States were required under their Medicaid Programs to pay for all medically necessary abortions.

The Court looked first to its holding in Maher against Roe and concluded that the funding restrictions of the Hyde amendment did not impinge upon the freedom of a woman to decide to terminate her pregnancy. Id. at 2685-87. The Court was unmoved by an attempt to distinguish the holding in Maher on the ground that the case dealt with a refusal by the State to pay for nontherapeutic abortions, whereas the Hyde amendment extended the denial of the use of Federal funds to therapeutic abortions also. After reexamining the health interest of the woman which served as a basis for the abortional freedom recognized in Roe against Wade, the Court nevertheless stated that:

> It simply does not follow that a woman's freedom of choice carries with it a constitutional entitlement to the financial resources to avail herself of the full range of protected choices. Id. at 2688.

The Court also rejected the argument that the Hyde amendment contravenes the religion clauses of the first amendment. The appellees asserted that the Hyde amendment incorporated doctrines of the Roman Catholic Church concerning the sinfulness of abortion, in violation of the establishment clause. In response, the Court stated that:

> It does not follow that a statute violates the Establishment Clause because it "happens to coincide or harmonize with the tenets of some or all religions." Id. at 2689.

Finally, the Court rejected the argument that the Hyde amendment violated the equal protection component of the fifth amendment by making Federal reimbursement available under Medicaid for medically necessary services generally but not for medically necessary abortions. Citing Maher, the Court could find no suspect classification by virtue of the statute's effect on the indigent; further, it found the statute to be rationally related to the Government's legitimate interest in protecting the "potential life of the fetus" (id. at 2691-92). On this analysis, the Court could find no constitutional infirmity with the Hyde amendment.

Williams v. Zbaraz, 100 S. Ct. at 2694, the companion case to Harris, dealt with an Illinois statute which prohibited State medical assistance payments for all abortions except those necessary to save the life of the pregnant woman. The Court found the case to be fully governed by the principles enunciated in Harris against McRae, and thus held that such a State enactment was not in violation of the 14th amendment (id. at 2700-01).

The Court's next decision in the abortion area came in 1981 in H.L. v. Matheson, 101 S. Ct. 1164 (1981), another case involving the issue of parental notification for the abortion of a minor. The Utah statute at issue required, in relevant part, that the physician "notify, if possible, the parents or guardian of the woman upon whom the abortion is to be performed, if she is a minor" (id. at 1166-67).

The Court limited its consideration of the issues to the effect of the statute upon minor daughters who (A) were living with and dependent upon their parents, (B) were not emancipated by marriage or otherwise, and (C) have not made a claim or showing as to their maturity or relations with their parents (id. at 1169-70). Reiterating the rule enunciated in Bellotti II "That a State may not constitutionally legislate a blanket, unreviewable power of parents, to veto their daughter's abortion," the Court nevertheless held that a "mere requirement of parental notice" would not violate the constitutional rights of the minor if she were immature and dependent (id. at 1171). The Court grounded this ruling in "the important considerations of family integrity and protecting adolescents," as well as the State's significant interest in "providing an opportunity for parents to supply essential medical and other information to a physician" (id. at 1172). Looking again to the State's interest in encouraging childbirth, the Court found no deficiency in the statute by virtue of its disparate treatment of minors who elect to carry the child to term as compared with those who choose to abort; and the Court found no valid basis for voiding the statute simply because it might inhibit some minors from seeking abortions (id. at 1173). Accordingly, as applied to the extremely narrow class before it, that is, of unemancipated minors who are dependent upon and living with their parents, and who have made no claim or showing as to maturity or relations with parents militating against notification, the Court upheld the Utah Statute. Id.

This brings our survey to the most recent Supreme Court pronouncements on abortion, Akron against Akron Center for Reproductive Health, Planned Parenthood against Missouri, and Simpoulos against Virginia, all of which were decided on June 15, 1983. Akron, the center-piece of this trilogy of cases, began by citing stare decisis, which the Court conceded is "perhaps never entirely persuasive on a constitutional question," as justification for reaffirming Roe versus Wade. The Court further clarified that "the right to choose an abortion, as with other fundamental rights subject to searching judicial examination, must be supported by a compelling State interest." Slip Op. at 9. Justice O'Connor called this standard "unduly burdensome." Once again, the Court used language to describe the right created in Roe that closely approximates the language of Senate Joint Resolution 3, "the right to choose an abortion."

Based on the exacting standards of the "compelling State interest" test, the Court declared four Akron city ordinances invalid. The first of these ordinances had required hospitalization for abortions performed after the first trimester of pregnancy. Justice Powell, speaking for the majority of six, noted that Roe had indeed stated that a State's interest in maternal safety becomes "compelling" at approximately the end of the first trimester. Nonetheless, the Court found that "present medical knowledge convincingly undercuts" Akron's argument that their ordinance promoted maternal safety. Accordingly the Court declared the hospitalization requirement unconstitutional as an "unreasonable infringement upon a woman's constitutional right to obtain an abortion." Slip Op. at 20. The effect of this action was to place the statutes of 21 States, which required hospitalization beyond the first trimester, in jeopardy.

Justice O'Connor, speaking for the three dissenters, attacked these conclusions on several grounds. In the first place, the Court was depriving States and localities of the discretion to weigh what requirements are necessary to protect maternal health within their jurisdictions:

> In determining whether the State imposes an "undue burden," we must keep in mind that when we are concerned with extremely sensitive issues, such as the one involved here, "the appropriate forum for their resolution in a democracy is the legislature. We should not forget that "legislatures are ultimate guardians of the liberties and welfare, of the people in quite as great degree as the courts."

She also noted that hospitalization is not an "unreasonable means of furthering the State's compelling interest in preserving maternal health." Slip Op. at 16.

The next aspect of the Arkon case dealt with parental consent. The Akron ordinance provided for parental consent for abortions performed on minors under 15 or, in the alternative, the consent of a juvenile court. Based on a finding that the juvenile court statute of Akron did not specifically confer authority to provide abortion consent or weigh the maturity of a minor to make such a decision alone, the majority declared the Akron statute unconstitutional. Justice O'Connor criticized this conclusion in strong language:

> In light of the Court's complete lack of knowledge about how the Akron ordinance will operate, and how the Akron ordinance and the state juvenile court statute interact, our "Scrupulous regard for the rightful independence of state governments" counsels against unnecessary interference by the federal courts with proper and validly administered state concerns, a course so essential to the balanced working of our federal system.

The Court next acted to invalidate the ordinance requiring a physician to inform his patient of the risks, effects, and alternatives associated with abortion prior to performing the operation. The majority based their ruling on the conclusion that "only a physician is competent to provide the information and counseling relevant to informed consent." Slip Op. at 31. To prescribe a recitation of risks and effects of abortion would thusly, in the opinion of the Court, place the physician in an "undesired and uncomfortable straitjacket." Id. at 27. This action by the Court places in jeopardy statutes in 24 of the 50 States which require that women be provided with some form of information prior to undergoing an abortion. The gist of Justice O'Connor's dissent is that providing additional information to a woman can only enhance her opportunity to make a truly informed decision. Information, per se, imposes "no undue burden or drastic limitation on the abortion decision." Slip Op. at 21.

The next aspect of the Court's decision struck down an ordinance requiring a 24-hour hiatus between the signing of a consent form and the performance of the abortion. The Court found that this requirement placed unacceptable encumbrances upon the woman's abortion decision. Justice O'Connor, once again, propounded an effective response: "The waiting period is surely a small cost to impose to ensure that the woman's decision is well-considered in light of its certain and irreparable consequences on fetal life, and the possible effects on her own." Id. at 23.

The final aspect of the Akron case invalidated an ordinance similar to several State statutes requiring humane and sanitary disposal of the remains of the aborted child. The Court concluded that this requirement was vague and uncertain because it seemed to "suggest a possible intent to mandate some sort of decent burial." Slip Op. at 33. Justice O'Connor noted that the real intent of this ordinance was to "preclude the mindless dumping of aborted fetuses on the garbage piles," Slip Op. at 24, and that the statute indicated no intent to require that physicians provide "decent burials." Id.

The Planned Parenthood case allowed States to require the presence of a second physician at the abortion of a viable fetus, to require submission of pathological reports following abortions, and to require a juvenile court to grant a minor consent for an abortion "for good cause" unless the court finds that the minor is not mature enough to make her own decisions.

Finally, in the Simpoulos case a Virginia doctor was convicted for performing an abortion during the second trimester of pregnancy outside of a licensed hospital. This Virginia hospitalization requirement differed from the requirement in Akron because Virginia also allows abortions to be performed in licensed outpatient clinics. In this case, the physician injected an unmarried minor with a saline solution and then concurred in her announced intention to deliver the fetus alone in a hotel room. At no time did the physician urge the pregnant minor to seek appropriate medical care or report to a hospital when labor began.

Thus, as shown by this survey of the progeny of Roe against Wade, the Court's treatment of the right of abortion which it promulgated in Roe has been essentially one of reaffirmation and extension of that right, and of protection of it from virtually all possible competing interest, private or public. Covering as they do almost a decade of carefully considered opinions dealing with every possible aspect of the matter, it is clear that these opinions evince a firm and unequivocal commitment by the Court to continued recognition and protection of a right to abortion. Thus, so far as the courts are concerned, such right has now become an indelible part of the fundamental law of the land.

CONCLUSION

In conclusion, I think we would profit by measuring the abortion regime established by Roe against the basic tenets that animated the creation of our Republic. Those principles were best articulated by Thomas Jefferson in the Declaration of Independence:

We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their creator with certain inalienable rights, that among these are Life, Liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. That to secure these rights, Governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed.

Thus our infant Nation established the protection of human life as the foremost duty of government. Roe's blatant conflict with this fundamental national value is apparent. In the words of President Reagan, "We cannot diminish the value of one category of human life—the unborn—without diminishing the value of all human life." Human Life Review, supra, at 8. Perhaps only one act of our Government has conflicted more with the founding tenets of our Republic than Roe and that was the last infamous Supreme Court case that denied the value of certain classes of humanity, the Dred Scott case. Dred Scott was not easily corrected either. It took more than a decade and an intervening war to secure a constitutional amendment reinstating constitutional protections for blacks. Indeed securing a constitutional amendment is never an easy process. The women's suffrage amendment, the 19th, was first rejected by the Senate in 1868 and failed twice more to gain approval in the Senate before its adoption in 1919 and ratification in 1920. Nonetheless correction of the Dred Scott error serves as an excellent analog for our consideration of the modern civil rights disgrace, Roe against Wade

In his Farewell Address, President George Washington remarked that "It is substantially true that virtue or morality is a necessary spring of popular government. The rule indeed extends with more or less force to every species of free government." His insightful thesis that the strength of our freedoms springs from the shared morality and convictions of our people lies at the heart of this great historic debate. This is a great moral issue. This is a great human rights issue. I posit with President Washington that, in ways more fundamental than we may now realize, the future of our free Nation may depend upon the outcome of this debate. Consider for a moment the role of the family as an institution promoting respect for other people, their dignity and inherent rights. Consider for a moment that if the family fails to teach principles of decency, our governments—already struggling to maintain civil order in the face of a crime epidemic—will be compelled to use more force to protect our liberties. Consider for a moment the essential role of individual responsibility in parents for raising their children. Consider for a moment an ethic that treats a child's entrance into his or her own family as if it were a matter of whether he were "wanted". Consider for a moment whether such callous attitudes and practices as are fostered by the abortion regime promote a society in which the instinctive acceptance of others is supplanted by a more self-centered and grudging attitude. Combined with the Federal courts tendency to treat abortion in terms of the totally isolated pregnant woman and her decision, this aspect of legalized abortion on demand could have long-term effects on the strength of those interpersonal bonds which hold our society—indeed any society—together.

Consider as well these insightful comments by national leaders:

"It seems to be as clear as daylight that abortion would be a crime." Mahatma Gandhi

". . . The child, by reason of his physical and mental immaturity needs special safeguards and care, including appropriate legal protection, before as well as after birth." Declaration on the Rights of the Child, United Nations, 11/20/59

"It is a very great poverty to decide that a child must die so that you may live as you wish." Mother Teresa

"We will stand up every time that human life is threatened. When the sacredness of life before birth is attacked, we will stand up and proclaim that no one even has the authority to destroy unborn life." Pope John Paul II

"No woman is the final arbiter about the disposition of her body and the embryonic human life flourishing therein. Doctors, too, must face up to the moral dilemma whether they can play havoc with the basic worth and dignity of human life when they freely perform abortions at all stages of pregnancy . . ." Rabbi Bernard L. Berzon, President of the Rabbinical Council of America.

"No right is more fundamental than the right to life itself and no innocent human life already begun can be deliberately terminated without offense to the Author of all life." National Conference of Catholic Bishops

"I fear the power of choice over life or death at human hands. I see no human being whom I could ever trust with such power—not myself nor any other. Human wisdom and human integrity are not great enough." Pearl S. Buck

"Social acceptance of abortion has begun to dull society's respect for all human life, leading to growing occurrences of infanticide, child abuse, and active euthanasia." Resolution, Southern Baptists Annual Convention, 1981.

"The unborn belongs neither to father nor mother, and not even to the self, but to God." Very Rev. Thaddeus P. Wojcik, a Priest of the Orthodox Church in America.

This is a moral issue, a moral issue literally, of life and death. Life and death of a society as well as countless unborn children.

Perhaps the foremost objective of the proposed amendment is to facilitate the development of a social consensus on the difficult issue of abortion. The abortion issue, if it is to be elevated into an issue of constitutional proportions, should be elevated only through the normal consensus-building procedure of the article V amending process rather than through the process of judicial reinterpretation. This proposal would reenfranchise all the people in fashioning a solution to the abortion controversy or, if not a solution, at least an equilibrium. This can only be done by placing this issue back within the representative branches of State governments where it should have remained all along. If the result is that difficult legislative compromises are reached through bitter sessions of negotiation and give and take—compromises that are not entirely satisfactory to those on either end of the spectrum on this issue—then the issue of abortion will have been dealt with in the same manner that most other difficult matters are dealt within a democratic system of government.

If the social divisions that have beset this country since the Roe decision are to be overcome, they will have to be overcome through a process in which all shades of opinion are considered and weighed, not simply those of a small minority of the citizenry. There is no more appropriate forum in a free society for these kinds of controversies to be debated and resolved than in State representative, legislative forums. Although some may observe—correctly—that basic issues of individual rights are not subject to referendum in a free society, this, of course, begs the basic question, which is precisely what those rights are and what their relative priorities are. It is the resolution of these precise questions that is unlikely to occur in the absence of a constitutional amendment of the sort of the human life federalism amendment.

● Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, it has been nearly a dozen years now since the Supreme Court found that a penumbra in the Constitution created a right to abortion on demand. I have never believed that the Court's decision in the Roe against Wade case was correct from a legal as well as moral ground.

There can be no doubt that the unrestricted access to abortions in our country is, as President Reagan has said: "the greatest moral crisis facing our country today." Nobel Peace Prize recipient Mother Teresa, whose life's work has been with the poor of Calcutta, has stated that: "the greatest misery of our time is the generalized abortion of children."

I am pleased to join as a cosponsor of a constitutional amendment that would declare that abortion is not a constitutional right. I am keenly aware that this Supreme Court decision has divided our country ever since it was handed down. But I do not believe that abortion should be permitted on demand, nor do I believe that it is a matter of constitutional right. In my view, the Supreme Court clearly overstepped its authority and Congress must reassert its proper role.

Mr. DENTON. Mr. President, I rise to join my distinguished colleague from Utah [Mr. HATCH] in strong support of a joint resolution to amend the Constitution to establish legislative authority in Congress and the States with respect to abortions. The real issue before us is not when life begins, nor is it abortion as an issue in isolation from other concerns. What the resolution addresses is the confrontation between an ethic that respects the sanctity of all innocent life, and one that imposes variable values upon human existence depending on its usefulness to others, its alleged meaningfulness, or its quality.

I suggest to my colleagues that the proabortion position in general, and the line of judicial decisions beginning with Roe against Wade, in particular, are based upon a quality of life ethic that denies the dignity and rights of handicapped children and others after birth just as surely as it denies the dignity and rights of all human life before birth.

I wish to be absolutely clear on that point. I am not saying only that abortion diminishes our respect for life and begins a slippery slope toward infanticide, I am saying that the precise philosophical and legal arguments used for the last 10 years to defend abortion are, by their very logic, already applicable to infanticide. The only thing that has thus far prevented those arguments from dominating our legal system is the remnant of the sanctity of life principle that we have retained from before the chain of decisions beginning with Roe against Wade. I do not know how much longer that remnant can withstand the corrosive effect of the abortion rulings from the Supreme Court and other courts. We must take action to reverse those decisions before they can do further damage.

Some of my colleagues may think that I am saying something controversial by positing a direct link between abortion and infanticide. They are gravely mistaken. I would like to present three statements to which most major thinkers on both sides of the abortion issue can subscribe. I repeat: these three statements have been made repeatedly by ethicists who support abortion on demand as well as by those who oppose it.

The first statement is this: The abortion debate has nothing to do with the biological question of when a new living organism of the human species comes into existence. As a biological matter, each genetically complete human individual comes into existence at conception. All subsequent stages of development are just stepping stones in the life cycle of the same human being; from embryo, to fetus, to infant, to child, to adolescent, to adult.

The second statement follows naturally from the first: What the abortion debate is really about is whether defenseless living members of the human species have lives worthy of respect, or whether we can dismiss some lives as being less worthy than others. In other words, all living members of the human race deserve the philosophical and legal title of "person," or are some human beings unworthy of that status because of their age, their location, their dependency on others, their inability to perform certain mental or physical tasks, and so on?

The third statement follows naturally from the first two. It is this: If one accepts the quality of life position, in which all human life is not of equal value, there is no intellectually defensible reason why one must cease to make the distinction at the moment of birth. Abortion and infanticide, therefore, rise or fall together.

I suspect that some will claim that my statements, especially the third one, are special pleading for the prolife cause. I assure you that the point is acknowledged by the proabortion side in the scholarly debate. Let me give a few examples to illustrate the point.

All three statements are found in a proabortion editorial published in the journal California Medicine in 1970 under the heading "A New Ethic for Medicine and Society." In quick succession, the editorial said: "First, it is absurd to deny the scientific fact, which everyone really knows, that human life begins at conception and is continuous, whether intra- or extrauterine, until death." Second, that the real debate is between the old sanctity of life ethic and the new quality of life ethic, with both being applicable before and after birth. Third, that since the old ethic has not yet been fully displaced, it has been necessary to separate the idea of abortion from killing, even though it is irrational to do so.

Many other examples appear in past hearing records and subcommittee reports on Senator HELM's human life bill.

For example, geneticist Leon Rosenberg testified against the bill, saying that there is no way of telling objectively what is worthy of being called human life in the philosophical sense of the word: "Some say that life begins at conception," said Dr. Rosenberg, "but others say that life begins when brain function appears, or when the heart beats, or when a recognizable human form exists in miniature, or when the fetus can survive outside the uterus, or when brain development is completed at 2 years of age."

Acceptance of those statements except the last one, of course, would mean that at least some of the abortions legalized by the Supreme Court in 1973 are genuine homicides in the fullest sense of the word. Acceptance of the last one would mean that the killing of any child under 2—and of some mentally retarded adults—would not really be homicide. Interestingly, Dr. Rosenberg dropped the last statement from his testimony when he delivered it orally. I imagine one of his politically astute proabortion friends told him at the last minute not to give the game away.

One could go on with examples for hours. Joseph Fletcher of the University of Virginia, for example, has published certain "indicators of humanhood" based primarily on mental abilities: an IQ of 40 for example, would make someone questionably human, whereas anyone below the 20 mark is not a person.

Michael Tooley, of Stanford University, admits that quickening, viability, and birth are all completely unconvincing as cutoff points for permitting abortion. He, therefore, concluded as early as 1972 that "infanticide during a time interval shortly after birth must be morally acceptable."

Nobel Prize winner James Watson suggests that birth certificates should only be issued 3 days after birth so parents can decide whether they want their child to live.

H. Tristram Englehardt of Georgetown University argues: "Not only is the fetus not in the strict sense a person, neither is a child until a certain level of consciousness is attained. The infant is still more an 'it' than a 'he' or a 'she'." Englehardt's 1975 essay carries the chilling title, "Ethical Issues in Aiding the Death of Small Children."

The link between abortion and infanticide is not abstract. It is only a characteristic of ethical theory. With every advance in prenatal medicine, with every new technique for treating the unborn child as a patient like any other, it becomes more and more obvious to the layman that birth is simply a change of location, not a sudden change from blob of tissue to human infant. It has little to do with age. We have, thriving in our hospital nurseries, premature infants, who are much younger than some of the children being destroyed by abortion and discarded like garbage in those same hospitals.

Doctors know that better than anyone else, and they know the obvious conclusion: What matters is not so much your stage of development as your perfection or, more generally, your wantedness. In a 1975 opinion poll, 75 percent of the leading pediatri-cians and professors of pediatrics surveyed said that some abortions are better described as infanticide. About 15 percent said abortion is always the same as infanticide. Answers to other questions in the survey suggested that most of the respondents were in favor of infanticide in some situations.

Yet some of my colleagues will still claim that the moment of birth is the magic point at which a fetus with no standing under the law, becomes a full-fleged legal person with all the rights of a citizen of the United States. Indeed, they will claim, that is exactly what the Supreme Court affirmed in 1973. The Court gave a woman a right to control the fetus as part of her own body before viability, but reaffirmed the child's personhood at the moment at which it can leave the womb and survive on its own.

That is absolutely wrong. It is grossly, absurdly wrong. I do not doubt that, if one were building an abstract legal system from scratch, it would be possible to define birth, or viability, as the point when life suddenly becomes a person with rights. To say, however, that the Supreme Court's abortion rulings did that is to display an abysmal ignorance of those rulings. To the contrary, the Court has already explicitly rejected all the best arguments one might use to keep its rationale for termination of life from extending beyond birth. The rationale has been expanded and clarified over time to the point that now, in 1983, all the legal mechanisms are in place to make a dead letter of all the constitutional rights of handicapped infants.

I will outline briefly the stages of that development. First, the 1973 abortion rulings themselves contained three things that prepared the way for legalized infanticide: First, the Court rejected the proabortion plaintiff's argument that abortion should be allowed because a woman has a constitutional right to do what she wants with her own body. The Court knew that this was an absurd principle, and that it would, for example, make State vaccination programs unconstitutional. So instead the Court posited a right of privacy which, it claimed, gave constitutional protection to decisions about the begetting, bearing, and raising of children. Here the Court cited several cases involving the rights of parents over their children after birth.

Second, the Court decided that, even after viability, the unborn child was only a potential life, not a legal person, and therefore could be destroyed if a live birth might have an adverse effect on the woman's social or emotional well-being. That, in and of itself, can be described as an authorization for infanticide, for abortion is medically defined as the expulsion of the fetus from the womb before viability. Moreover, the Court used "viability" as the "capability of meaningful life outside the mother's womb." Since "meaningful" remained an undefined and subjective term, one was left to wonder whether a fetus, a baby, might clearly be alive outside the womb and still not be viable.

Third, the Court denied 14th amendment personhood even to viable unborn children, because statutory and common law had never treated them as having all the rights and responsibilities of persons, and because most uses of the term "person" in the Constitution—for example, in clauses on who is eligible to vote or to be a Member of Congress—were not applicable to the unborn. As some legal scholars have noted, newborn children might also fail those two tests. Most uses of person in the Constitution apply only to adults.

Two days after the Court's rulings in Roe and Doe, the New York Times printed a letter, from Prof. Paul Ramsey of Princeton University, which was surely prophetic. Professor Ramsey said in part:

> Justice Blackmun described the grounds for compelling state interest in the unborn as their "capability of meaningful life outside the mother's womb." Meaningful? Thus the Court opened the door to weighing human lives according to comparative worthiness, or something called "meaningfulness,"
> Ineluctably we pass from abortion to infanticide, whether the Justices know it or not. Ineluctably, because many of the reasons alleged to justify permissiive abortion have equal force in justifying the killing of neonates in hospital nurseries.

I am sure that Professor Ramsey was saddened but not suprised to find himself testifying before my Subcommittee on Family and Human Services in a confrontation with medical groups that now openly oppose legal interventions to prevent infanticide in hospital nurseries.

In the second stage of the legal evolution, the courts overturned manslaughter convictions against various physicians who had neglected, or acted to kill, children born alive during late-term abortions. In reversing criminal charges against Dr. Kenneth Edelin in 1976, in a case involving the death of a child born alive during an abortion at the margin of viability, the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts suggested that the physician must not be held to the same standard of care during an abortion as if a live birth had been intended. Requiring adherence to ordinary standards of medical practice for premature newborns might infringe on the constitutional freedoms that protect the right of abortion, Dr. William Waddill was acquitted of similar charges in 1973, although an eyewitness claimed to have seen him actually strangling a child who unexpectedly left the womb alive and gasping for breath.

In these and other cases, as one commentator put it, the fact of a live birth became "somewhat like a State border, which an officer of one jurisdiction may disregard if he is following a fugitive in hot pursuit."

The third stage took place with the Supreme Court's 1979 ruling in Colautti against Franklin. The Court invalidated as unconstitutional a State law requiring medical treatment for infants born alive and possibly viable during abortions. The decision was made in large part because a vindication of the right of those children to reasonable care after they leave the womb would have what the Court called a "chilling effect" on the right to perform late-term abortions. With that decision, the U.S. Constitution was allowed to justify the neglect of even healthy newborns whose parents did not want them to survive.

The fourth stage came with the widespread practice of prenatal diagnosis followed by selective abortion of the handicapped child. State courts began to allow suits for wrongful birth and wrongful life, so that a physician could be sued for failing to perform prenatal tests and to facilitate abortion. One State appeals court suggested that a handicapped child should be able to sue her own parents for not having destroyed her before birth. Some courts thus used the abortion rulings to create a new financial pressure toward infanticide.

Imagine the following scenario. A physician delivers a premature infant girl by caesarean section, and finds to his surprise that she has a severe mental or physical disability. He suddenly realizes that, since he didn't expect this, he never advised the mother to get an amniocentesis to insure that the child was not defective, so the child or her parents could sue him for the lifetime costs of raising, treating, and educating her. The parents now realize not only that they must assume the burdens of raising the child, but that they could be sued by the child for inflicting upon her what some commentators have called the injury of wrongful existence. The obstetrician, however, realizes that the Supreme Court's abortion rulings have provided not only the motivation but also the means for eliminating the problem. What is to prevent physicians and parents from neglecting the infant until she dies and then claiming that she wasn't viable in the first place, especially since the Supreme Court has ruled that the determination of viability must be left to the judgment of the individual physician? What is to keep the physician and the parents from saying that the handicapped girl, even though born at full term, is not viable because she is not capable of truly meaningful life? Since a late-term abortion by hysterectomy uses exactly the same techniques as does Caesarean section, except that the patient is not supposed to survive, what is to prevent the physician from changing one line on the medical record and retroactively labeling the entire procedure as an abortion? That would prevent all prying questions about the child's death, and would place the physician and the parent under the protective umbrella of a fundamental constitutional right.

Abortion advocates 10 years ago claimed that abortion was, tragically, necessary as a backup for contraceptive failure. Have we already arrived at the point where infanticide is a tragically necessary backup to unsuccessful abortions? Please note that wrongful life suits are not based only on the acceptability of abortion. They assume that a handicapped child's life after birth is a wrong, justifying financial penalties, and abortion is proposed as a means of preventing this wrong before it happens. But if a child manages to sneak past that net, why not cure the wrong that was not prevented?

Why not, indeed? The Indiana State Supreme Court asked itself that question and, imbued with the slogans and the spirit of Roe against Wade, it couldn't think of an answer. So a child had to die. This is stage 5: quiet judicial approval of infanticide. The baby boy now known as "Infant Doe" was born with Down's syndrome and with a digestive blockage that called for routine surgery. The child's obstetrician and parents decided against lifesaving surgery. The child was then refused all intravenous food and water, wheeled to a dark and empty room in an adult ward, and left to die of dehydration. That took 6 days. Witnesses say the baby cried a great deal the first 3 days, whether from fear, or loneliness, or hunger, or all of them, but was much quieter after that when hunger and dehydration made him too weak to cry.

Massive efforts to save the child's life by the hospital, potential adoptive parents, State prosecutors, and legal defense groups were to no avail. "Infant Doe" died after the Indiana Supreme Court affirmed his parents' right to ensure his early death. The court has sealed the records in the case, but all reports indicate that the well-worn rationale of the abortion rulings was the decisive factor in the court's decision. The parents' attorney defended their freedom of choice and accused the State prosecutor of intervening in medical judgments which should be reached only between the parents and their physician.

The decision to end the child's life was an ideological, not a medical, decision, but then so are most decisions to abort, even in the late weeks of pregnancy. The real motivation was that the child's life would have been a burden on the parents and not sufficiently meaningful. If he had been allowed to live, claimed the attorney for the parents on a TV talk show, "there would have been a horrific trauma—trauma to the child who would never have enjoyed a quality of life of any sort, trauma to the family, trauma to society." Let us note that the abysmal quality of life that effectively invalidated the equal protection clause of our Constitution in this case was that of a child who might have been simply a slow learner in school, or even of average intelligence. It is impossible at birth to predict the severity of a particular case of Down's syndrome.

Mr. President, the Reagan administration responded to the "Infant Doe" case by reminding hospitals that under the Rehabilitation Act of 1973, handicapped people have the right to equitable treatment. That effort simply to reaffirm that 10-year-old civil rights law has been blocked in the courts. Although Judge Gesell of the U.S. district court based his April 14 ruling on procedural grounds, he also left no doubt about where he thinks the law should come down on the substantive issue. Gesell has provided us with stage 6: explicit, written judicial arguments in favor of extending the quality of life ethic to deny equal protection to handicapped citizens. Gesell himself, of course, does not call the victims "handicaped citizens;" he calls them "seriously defective."

Judge Gesell proposes a two-tiered system to determine a child's right to lifesaving treatment. Such treatment should clearly be ordered when it will cure all handicaps, allowing the child to attain complete health and develop normally. He doubts, however, that a child should be saved when its "quality of life" and "chances for an independent existence" will still be "seriously impaired" by a handicap, Gesell finds fault with routine surgery allowing a retarded child to eat, because it "cannot alter the mental retardation caused by Down's." In other words, handicapped citizens have a clear right to medical treatment only if it will remove their handicap.

Gesell goes beyond denying that handicapped newborns should get the same standard of care as other newborns. He denies that any standard of care at all exists for handicapped newborns. He expresses doubt that Congress really intended to protect newborn infants when it enacted the Rehabilitation Act, as though it doubted that newborns are legal persons subject to civil rights protections.

Despite all that, the most provocative sentence in the ruling is the remark that regulations protecting handicapped newborns "may in some cases infringe upon the interests outlined in cases such as * * * Roe versus Wade."

In light of that ruling, columnist George Will's reaction to the "Infant Doe" case seems fully justified.

In a tone of controlled anger, he wrote:

> In 1973 the Supreme Court created a virtually unrestrictable right to kill fetuses. Critics of the ruling were alarmed because the court failed to dispatch the burden of saying why the fetus, which unquestionably is alive, is not protectable life. Critics were alarmed also because the court, having incoherently emphasized "viability," offered no intelligible, let alone serious, reason why birth should be the point at which discretionary killing stops. Critics feared what the Indiana homicide demonstrates: the killing will not stop.
> The values and passions, as well as the logic of some portions of the "abortion rights" movement, have always pointed beyond abortion, toward something like the Indiana outcome, which affirms a broader right to kill.

When Roe versus Wade was handed down in 1973, it apparently emboldened pediatricians who had been quietly neglecting handicapped infants to go public in the medical journals, and even to recommend their approach to other physicians. Two of the trailblazers, Drs. Duff and Campbell of Yale-New Haven Hospital, reported that 43 percent of the deaths in their nursery were related to withholding of treatment; those included situations identical with that of "Infant Doe" in Indiana. Duff and Cambell closed their article by saying: "If working out these dilemmas in ways such as those we suggest is in violation of the law, we believe the law should be changed;" 10 years later, thanks to Roe versus Wade's rationale and Judge Gesell, I fear they are about to get their wish.

Mr. President, in conclusion I want to be honest and frank with you. My colleagues know that I am against legalized abortion at any stage, and that I consider it an unjustified attack on an innocent child. Some of my colleagues disagree strongly with my position on the matter. With respect to the legislation before us, however, which simply removes from our books the 1973 abortion rulings, I think the alliances should line up a little differently.

There are some in our country who are simply unreachable on the matter, because they do not have much of a problem with either abortion or infanticide. Such people consider the starving of a handicapped infant as just another defense civil liberties and of the right of parental privacy. I do not have much to say to those people. Those in this body who share their view must surely vote against the amendment, because they must defend the series of Supreme Court decisions that provide the only clear legal precedent of a constitutional right to infanticide. I want them to know, however, that the quality of life ethic to which they subscribe is, to my mind, no ethic at all. It is a flimflam. It is a batch of sophisticated mumbo-jumbo designed to rationalize the oppression of the weak by the strong. Reduced to its essentials, it is the principle that the runt of the litter always get pushed away from the teat. I pray that those who think like that will never obtain complete power in this country because on that day we will have little hope of continued liberty.

I think that most people who support the Supreme Court's decisions, in this Chamber and around the country, do so because they do not fully realize their conceptual and legal implications. To my colleagues I want to say, please reflect very deeply and very carefully before you vote to uphold the Court's abortion rulings. Pray and agonize over it a little. Because if you think that those rulings pose no danger to those already born, if you think that a little thing like legal personhood is going to protect the rest of us from the acid that is now eating its way through the legal will that protects us from anarchy, I think that all evidence is aganist you.

As I said earlier, it may be possible in the abstract to arbitrarily define birth as a boundary between life that can be killed, through abortion, and personhood that justifies protection of the law, but it does not make any logical or moral sense. It is definitely not what the Supreme Court's rulings have done. All unwittingly, I think we risk affirming a legal trend whose destructive power we have only begun to witness, judicial support and justification for the attitude that being unwanted, whatever one's age, is a capital offense. That trend contradicts everything else we defend in terms of the civil rights of handicapped people and other defenseless minorities who, at one time or another have not been wanted by those in power.

I urge my colleagues to support the legislation. I realize that many of us may continue to disagree on the extent to which our Government should take affirmative steps to protect the unborn, but perhaps we can agree that the right to kill is not a healthy thing to have elevated to the status of fundamental constitutional principle.

I commend my colleagues who agree with me on the abortion issue for their commitment to the defenseless who cannot say thank you themselves. I urge them to support Senator HATCH's amendment with every bit of enthusiasm they might like to reserve for a stronger measure.

The courts can decide that handicapped infants are persons. They can also decide that the measures taken to snuff out their lives are not acts of killing but simply medical judgments. The courts can decide that, because infants are persons, they have a fundamental right to die or a right to be free of the injury of wrongful existence. None of us wants to wait around to find out what imaginative and creative lines of reasoning will be used next to broaden the scope of the killing.

I urge my colleagues to help me put out some of the raging fire now, and not argue about the imperfections of the hose we are using. We will surely fight another day over other aspects of the right to life, but I fear that the fight will be over if the Court rulings are allowed to work their way more deeply into our legal system.

Thank you, Mr. President.

By Mr. KENNEDY:

S.J. Res. 10. A joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States relative to equal rights for women and men; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT RELATING TO EQUAL RIGHTS

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I welcome this opportunity to reintroduce the equal rights amendment, and to reaffirm my strong commitment to making ERA part of the Constitution of the United States.

Today marks the beginning of a new campaign to pass and to ratify equal rights. It is a national disgrace that in 1985 we have not yet enshrined the equality of all Americans in our Constitution.

The ERA is the mandate for the Federal Government and for every State to insure equality in both the law and the life of this land. The need for a constitutional guarantee of equal rights for all citizens has never been greater. Although one-half of all women in this country work, and two-thirds of them work out of economic necessity, women hold only 7.5 percent of the jobs in the physical sciences and 1 percent of the jobs in engineering. Women continue to be significantly underrepresented in all professions and account for only 26 percent of medical school students, 17 percent of dental school students, and 30 percent of doctorates awarded. The record of the progress of women toward equality in our society reveals much that remains to be done.

In the Old Testament, the Book of Leviticus described an earlier time when women in the workplace earned 30 shekels for every 50 earned by men. Two thousand five hundred years have passed since that verse was written, but women have barely progressed at all on the issue of pay equity.

Female-headed households continue to dominate the bottom rungs of the economic ladder. The July 1983 census report found that while the poverty rate for married-couple families in 1982 was nearly 8 percent, it was almost five times that high for single-parent, female-headed families. The average female head of a household with no spouse present in 1981 had an income of $11,000. The average male in a similar position earned $20,000. And for elderly women, whose median income is $5,000, the situation is even more desperate.

Women cannot depend on the courts to uphold statutory protections against discrimination. The Grove City College decision by the Supreme Court last year highlighted the fragile nature of the statutory protections against sex discrimination. Significant numbers of American women triumphed in the Summer Olympics in Los Angeles—but the Supreme Court in Grove City has now stripped the mandate from the law which provided the opportunities for them to become Olympic champions. Nothing less than the broad constitutional prohibition against discrimination in ERA can effectively end the continued bias against women in our society.

The road to ratification will not be easy. But the extraordinary importance of the effort gives us new strength to see the struggle through to the final victory, so that at last ERA will take its rightful place in the Constitution of the United States. A new Congress begins today—and a new battle to achieve this historic goal begins as well.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the amendment may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the joint resolution ws ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S.J. RES. 10

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following article is proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of the Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States within seven years from the date of its submission by the Congress:

"Article—

"SECTION 1. Equality of rights under the law shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of sex.

"SECTION 2. The Congress shall have the power to enforce, by appropriate legislation, the provisions of this article.

"SECTION 3. This amendment shall take effect two years after the date of ratification.".

S.J. Res. 13. A joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution relating to a Federal balanced budget and tax limitation; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

FEDERAL BALANCED BUDGET AND TAX LIMITATION PROPOSAL

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I am reintroducing today Senate Joint Resolution 13, the proposed balanced budget/tax limitation constitutional amendment. During the 97th Congress, this amendment became the first such amendment in the history of the Nation to earn the approval of a House of Congress. On August 4, 1982, Senate Joint Resolution 58 was proposed as the 27th amendment to the U.S. Constitution by a Senate vote of 69 to 31. Less than 2 months later, a similar measure was considered by the full House of Representatives and secured the support of a clear majority of the body, although it fell short of the requisite two-thirds vote.

During the 98th Congress, the direct predecessor of the amendment I am introducing today—known as Senate Joint Resolution 5—was reported by the Judiciary Committee but was not considered by the full Senate.

I am confident that the forthcoming Congress will see increased momentum on the part of the proposed amendment. With fiscal year 1985 budget deficits likely to be in the vicinity of $200 billion, and with 32 States having applied to Congress for a constitutional convention on the subject of a balanced budget amendment, I believe that the need for such an amendment is at least as compelling today at it was during the 97th and 98th Congresses.

The recent fiscal history of the Federal Government is, by now, all too well known:

Congress has balanced the Federal budget only once in the past quarter century.

The level of these annual budget deficits has grown enoromously over this period of time. The eight largest peacetime deficits in the history of the Nation have been incurred during the past decade alone.

The total national debt of the United States soared to more than $1 trillion 2 years ago, and is increasing rapidly. Fully three-quarters of the total national debt incurred by this country in its entire history has been incurred during this brief period.

Federal spending, which first surpassed $100 billion in the latter years of the Kennedy administration, 20 years ago, and which first surpassed $200 billion only 13 years ago, and $300 billion only 8 years ago, today easily surpasses $800 billion annually. At the same time that this Nation is enduring record deficits, we are also enduring record levels of Federal taxation, because of this unrestrained Federal spending.

While it used to be said that Federal deficits were not such a bad thing—because "we owed it to ourselves"—and could even be useful by "stimulating" the economy, it is clear today to virtually every reasonable observer, of whatever political or philosophical persuasion, that deficit spending has consequences—detrimental and unfortunate consequences. As a result of a quarter-century of virtually unchecked deficit spending, this Nation is suffering today from historically unprecedented levels of unemployment, levels of inflation that have been in double digits for most of the past decade, catastrophically high interest rates, and declining levels of national investment and productivity. The standard of living, after taxes and after inflation, has actually declined for the majority of American households over the past decade.

Mr. President, these are the consequences of a fiscal system in which there is a virtual absence of serious fiscal restraints upon the ability of the National Government to spend money. These are the consequences of a fiscal system in which there is an illusion that we can continue to live beyond our means indefinitely without having to concern ourselves about a time of reckoning or accounting. These are the consequences of a fiscal system in which there is every encouragement of the spending impulse to avoid placing new burdens upon those who must inevitably pay for this spending, whether it be in the form of higher taxes, higher rates of interest, unemployment, or diminished productivity.

I believe that there is a growing consensus in this country that perceives these problems. This is a perception that is shared, increasingly, by Democrats and Republicans, liberals and conservatives, Keynesians, supply-siders, traditionalists, and believers in classical theories of economy. Our economy is in bad shape, and it is in bad shape because we have been mortgaging our Nation's economic future with more than a generation of deficits, more than a generation of living beyond our economic means.

What, then, the solution? It is my view that the proposed constitutional amendment is absolutely necessary. I have come to hold this view, despite my strong belief that a constitutional amendment should be enacted only as a last resort. If there were an alternative nonconstitutional solution that promised success, I would prefer it to an amendment.

However, there is no alternative solution. We have experimented repeatedly with statutory approaches, including approaches such as the Byrd-Grassley amendment to require a balanced Federal budget in fiscal year 1981 and subsequent years, and continued fine tuning of the Budget Control and Impoundment Act of 1974. While I believe that the Budget Act has provided some improvement in the budget process, I certainly do not believe that it offers any significant promise in getting us out of our present economic rut. Indeed, the effective period of the Budget Act has almost perfectly coincided with that period of the most unconstrained budget growth.

A constitutional amendment to require a balanced budget is necessary because our predicament today is deeply rooted in our fiscal system. There are institutional problems that make it difficult for even the most fiscally responsible Members of Congress to conduct themselves in a fiscally responsible manner. A constitutional amendment, rather than a statute, is necessary because only an amendment can afford the sort of external constraint upon the spending tendencies of Members of Congress that is required. There must be an outside limitation, not simply a self-imposed limitation in the form of a simple statute or budget resolution.

The proposed amendment—in the same manner as Senate Joint Resolution 58 and Senate Joint Resolution 5—addresses the institutional problems of our present fiscal system. It addresses the inherent bias toward spending in our fiscal system that has proven so intractable and unyielding. This spending bias arises from the fact that Members of Congress are free to vote for new spending initiatives without, at the same time, having to vote for new tax initiatives. In other words, Members of Congress can vote to support the programs of the spending interests, and reap the political benefits of such spending—in the form of electoral support, for example—without having to place themselves on record for higher taxes to pay for such spending. There are no countervailing political disadvantages in the form of tax votes that would overcome the political advantages stemming from the pro-spending votes.

This spending bias arises from two important elements of our fiscal system: First, the unlimited availability of deficit spending to Members of Congress; and second, Members accessibility each year to increased revenues derived from so-called tax bracket creep or tax-flation.

Because of the unlimited availability of deficit spending, Members of Congress are free to respond favorably to the spending groups without having to vote for the necessary new taxes to pay for their new programs. Rather, Congress can merely indulge in new deficit spending. The consequences of such deficits come only in future years—in such forms as inflation and interest rates—and are rarely attributed to the members who voted for the earlier deficits. In other words, Members reap the benefits of the prospending vote and avoid totally the need for the protaxing vote. It is a case of Members eating their cake, and having it as well.

A similar situation arises with respect to the second element of the spending bias—the accessibility each year of increased revenues to Congress as a result of "bracket creep." What this means is that Members of Congress are free to vote for new spending and again can avoid having to vote for higher taxing because larger amounts of revenues are automatically available. In the absence of congressional action of any sort, our present tax system insures that new revenues will be available to Congress each year even in the absence of an explicit tax vote.

The principal purpose of the proposed amendment is to overcome this spending bias by establishing as a precondition for new spending the requirement that Congress either go on record—by a three-fifths vote—in favor of deficit spending, or—by a majority vote—in favor of the necessary revenues to account for such new spending. The proposed amendment is not designed to "read economic policy into the Constitution," as is commonly suggested, but is designed to inject a new element of accountability and honesty into the budget process by requiring Members of Congress to go on record on these matters. Under the proposed amendment, Members can continue to support higher levels of spending, taxing, and deficit, but only if they are equally willing to go on record in behalf of such propositions. No longer will they be able to accrue political benefits by supporting spending measures without having to concern themselves with the accompanying necessity of new revenue measures, or without having to go on record as favoring increased levels of deficit.

The proposed amendment is one that is consistent with sound constitutional principles, as well as sound economic principles. It does not attempt to write into the Constitution any particular theory of economy; it does not attempt to inject the Constitution into the day-to-day budgetary decisions of Congress; it does not embed permanently into the Constitution any particular levels of spending or taxing; and it does not memorialize into the Constitution arbitrary levels of numbers; and arcane economic terms. All that the proposed amendment attempts to do is to create an economic environment within which responsible fiscal decisionmaking can take place. It does not insure that we will always see the Federal Government acting in a responsible, frugal manner; it does insure, however, that there is at least a reasonable possibility of this taking place.

Let me strongly suggest to my colleagues that they look at the Senate report prepared last year on Senate Joint Resolution 5 with respect to the detailed economic and constitutional case for the proposed amendment. I believe that the report contains a compelling argument for this amendment at the same time that it attempts to address the most recurrent criticisms that have been raised about it.

I would note that the amendment that I am introducing today is identical to the amendment which was reported favorably by the Judiciary Committee last year.

Mr. President, let me briefly summarize the provisions of the proposed amendment and again refer my colleagues to the committee report—No. 98-628—For a more extensive discussion.

SECTION 1

This section would require Congress, prior to the outset of each fiscal year, to prepare a budget in which proposed levels of outlays do not exceed proposed levels of receipts unless a specific level of deficit is approved by a vote of three-fifths of the Members belonging to each House of Congress. Such a budget could be amended or altered at any time during the fiscal year, although subject to the same procedures and limitations as the original budget. Congress and the President would be responsible for insuring that the actual level of budget outlays does not exceed the proposed level of outlays.

SECTION 2

This section establishes the formula by which the maximum level of budget receipts is established for the proposed budget put together prior to each fiscal year. This formula is designed to insure that the balanced budget requirement of section 1 is not satisfied by spending and taxing levels that increase inexorably as a share of the economy. This maximum level of budget receipts could be exceeded, however, any time that a majority of the Members of each House of Congress are prepared to go on record in behalf of increased levels of taxes.

SECTION 3

This section directs the President to submit to the Congress prior to each fiscal year, a proposed budget in which receipts and outlays are consistent with sections 1 and 2. Although section 1 already implies such a requirement, this section clarifies and makes more specific this aspect of the President's responsibility to use his authority to achieve the objectives of the proposed amendment.

SECTION 4

This section establishes a waiver of the basic requirements of sections 1 and 2 in the event of declarations of war by the Congress.

SECTION 5

This section is a standard definitional section that clarifies that the intent of the proposed amendment is to define receipts and outlays for purposes of the amendment in the broadest possible manner.

SECTION 6

This section clarifies that Congress is empowered to enforce and implement the provisions of the proposed amendment by appropriate legislation.

SECTION 7

This section establishes the effective date of the provisions of the amendment as the second fiscal year beginning after its ratification.

Mr. President, let me conclude by setting forth three basic premises that I and my colleagues have borne in mind in developing the proposed constitutional amendment—in particular I refer to Senator HATCH and Senator DECONCINI in this regard, the chairman and ranking minority member of the Subcommittee on the Constitution. First, there are admittedly gaps in the proposed amendment that will have to be filled by enacting legislation. The purpose of the proposed amendment is to set forth in the Constitution a basic principle of government; it is not to write into it a detailed statute defining terms and defining specific procedures, Second, as with any other constitutional provision, I would expect that Members of Congress and other Government officers would abide by the clear spirit and intent of the proposed amendment. While a determined and willful Congress will always have opportunities to circumvent its provisions—as with most other constitutional provisions—I would anticipate that Congress will attempt to abide by both the plain language and the broad policies that are reflected in the amendment. Finally, none of the proponents of the amendment view it as a panacea to our Nation's economic problems and we have not attempted to sell it as such. The amendment will not, singlehandedly, turn our economy around or restore a sense of fiscal responsibility to the deliberations of Congress; what it will do, however, is to allow the possibility that more responsible policies will emerge from an environment within which Members of Congress are more directly accountable to their constituents for the implications of the budgetary decisions.

Mr. President, I take pride in reintroducing the proposed amendment and strongly encourage all of my colleagues to join me in this action. The time is long overdue that Congress respond to the clear desire of the great majority of the American people, of whatever professional, economic, racial, or ethnic background. I ask unanimous consent that the entire test of the proposed amendment be placed in the RECORD at this joint.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S.J. RES. 13

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following article is proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of the Constitution if ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States within seven years after its submission to the States for ratification:

"ARTICLE —

"SECTION 1. Prior to each fiscal year, the Congress shall adopt a statement of receipts and outlays for that year in which total outlays are not greater than total receipts. The Congress may amend such statement provided revised outlays are not greater than revised receipts. Whenever three-fifths of the whole number of both Houses shall deem it necessary, Congress in such statement may provide for a specific excess of outlays over receipts by a vote directed solely to that subject. The Congress and the President shall ensure, pursuant to legislation or through exercise of their powers under the first and second articles, that actual outlays do not exceed the outlays set forth in such statement.

"SECTION 2. Total receipts for any fiscal year set forth in the statement adopted pursuant to this article shall not increase by a rate greater than the rate of increase in national income in the year or years ending not less than six months nor more than twelve months before such fiscal year, unless a majority of the whole number of both Houses of Congress shall have passed a bill directed solely to approving specific additional receipts and such bill has become law.

"SECTION 3. Prior to each fiscal year, the President shall transmit to Congress a proposed statement of receipts and outlays for that year consistent with the provisions of this article.

"SECTION 4. The Congress may waive the provisions of this article for any fiscal year in which a declaration of war is in effect.

"SECTION 5. Total receipts shall include all receipts of the United States except those derived from borrowing and total outlays shall include all outlays of the United States except those for repayment of debt principal.

"SECTION 6. The Congress shall enforce and implement this article by appropriate legislation.

"SECTION 7. This article shall take effect for the second fiscal year beginning after its ratification.".

Mr. DENTON. Mr. President, I rise to join my distinguished colleague from South Carolina, Mr. THURMOND, in support of a constitutional amendment to reform the budget, taxing, and spending practices of the Federal Government.

As support for the amendment has grown, I have been impressed by the urgency and the importance that millions of Americans attach to its passage. On the whole, I believe that American taxpayers are disappointed and frustrated that, year after year, the Congress has failed to balance the Federal budget. Their frustration is shown by the 32 State legislatures that have adopted resolutions urging the Congress and the President to bring the Nation's budget into balance.

At long last, the moment has come when the Congress can respond to the frustrations of American taxpayers by thoroughly debating, and then passing, the balanced budget constitutional amendment.

The resolution would amend the Constitution to require that, each year, Congress adopt a budget statement in which expenditures do not exceed revenues. Additionally, total revenues could not increase at a rate greater than the rate of increase in national income unless Congress passes a bill approving more revenues. The resolution would permit Congress to adopt a budget statement containing a deficit only if approved by three-fifths of both Houses of Congress or by a convention called for that purpose by two-thirds (34) of the States, and ratified by three-fourths (38) of the States. The resolution also would require the President to submit a balanced budget to Congress.

Mr. President, those who question the efficacy of a balanced budget amendment have raised two primary arguments in opposition to it. First, they argue that it would incorporate into the Constitution a rigid, and therefore economically unsound, fiscal policy. Second, they argue that amending the Constitution is too drastic a way to address the problem of spending.

I believe, however, that both arguments fall because they do not take into account the dual crises that our Nation faces: The economic crisis that threatens to destroy our historic high levels of productivity, and the crisis of confidence that results when average citizens lose faith in the ability of their government to exercise discipline in matters of taxing and spending.

I recognize that men and women of good will can disagree about the necessity of the provision of the amendment that prohibits increases in the share of the national income that goes to the Federal Government unless a specific exception is approved by Congress. There are wide philosophical and political differences about the question of how much spending the Federal Government can and should undertake.

The notion, however, that it is improper to reestablish the principle that Federal expenditures should be no greater than the Federal revenue is preposterous. It is only in recent years that the Congress abandoned the requirement of our unwritten constitution for a balanced budget. I do not believe that the American people will continue to tolerate the near tyranny of higher and higher rates of Government spending and taxation.

From a practical standpoint, we should recognize that the amendment is not an attempt to write a particular theory of economics into the Constitution. As Professor Scalia of the University of Chicago has pointed out, the legislative requirements of the amendment "do not require any particular economic course," such as a balanced budget with no increase in taxes, "but merely specify the procedures to be followed when that course is abandoned." I believe, however, that it is clear that this amendment rightly establishes a bias in favor of a balanced budget with no increase in taxes. That is an appropriate national goal, which happens to be popular as well. It is one that the amendment can help us to attain without placing our public budget in the strait jacket of inflexible economic theory.

I must emphasize again that I believe that we face a crisis of confidence on the part of the American public. Most taxpayers simply do not believe that the Congress has the willpower to cut spending and balance the Federal budget. The mistrust appears well founded when one reviews the history of statutory efforts to reform the budget process and restrain spending. Alvin Rubushka of Stanford University presented such a review in a monograph prepared for the Taxpayers' Foundation. He said:

> In the Humphrey-Hawkins Full Employment Act, a balanced budget was declared to be a national public policy priority. An amendment offered by Rep. (now Senator) CHARLES GRASSLEY and Senator HARRY BYRD, Jr., to an IMF loan program measure was enacted into law and requires that, beginning with FY 1981, total budget outlays of the Federal government "shall not" exceed its receipts (P.L. 95-435). In 1979, a provision in a measure to increase the public debt limit stated that "congress shall balance the Federal budget" (P.L. 96-5), which required the congressional budget committees to propose balanced budgets for FY 1981 and subsequent years. None of these measures has effectively constrained deficits.

I strongly believe that the prudent and responsible management of public funds is a fundamental governmental and political requirement. The reestablishment of the balanced budget principle is a "broad and enduring ideal" that is worthy of inclusion in the document that establishes the basic structure of our Government. I am afraid that simple statutory approaches to reasserting that important principle will fail like their predecessors. Only the enactment of a constitutional amendment will explicitly mandate fiscal responsibility and be enforceable by and on future Congresses.

I urge my colleagues to join in the effort to balance our national budget by placing a requirement to that effect in the fundamental law of our land. We need to do that for our benefit and for succeeding generations who will otherwise bear the burden of our profligacy and irresponsibility.

Thank you, Mr. President.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I am pleased today to join as an original cosponsor of the balanced budget-tax limitation constitutional amendment. As the author of the only provision of Federal law that requires the Congress to balance the budget, the so-called Grassley-Byrd amendment, I have become keenly aware that nothing short of a constitutional prohibition against deficit spending will control our actions.

The fact that we are now facing a budgetary deficit in excess of $200 billion is ample witness that Congress lacks the will to reduce spending on its own. Mr. President, from the time that the Republic began until 1962, the annual budget of the United States never exceeded $100 billion—that is, as recent as John F. Kennedy's administration—we spent less than half the amount of money that this year we will spend in excess of revenues. Indeed, Richard Nixon was President when total Federal spending—that's total Federal spending, reached the $200 billion level.

Federal spending this year will exceed 23 percent of the Nation's gross national product. In 1962, Federal Government spending represented only 19 percent of the Nation's GNP. The only time in the history of the United States in which Federal spending represented a larger share on the Nation's total production was during the Second World War. Clearly, Mr. President, Government is spending too much money and increasing its expenditures too rapidly—not taxing too little.

Mr. President, the Congress must live within limits. It must live within the limits of the Constitution and it must live within the limits of its budget. If Congress acts in violation of the Constitution, then the Federal courts invalidate its actions. While we should exercise the discipline ourselves, the framers placed an independent judiciary in the Constitution to check our excess. If the amendment becomes part of the Constitution and Congress exceeds its authority by passing a budget that spends more than it takes in, then its actions are invalid under the Constitution and void. Congress would then be forced to work on a new budget.

As long and laborous a process as that is, it is our duty, and we must accept the unpleasant responsibilities that we have as legislators. I am pleased to cosponsor this proposed constitutional amendment.

Mr. BOREN. Mr. President, I am proud that the first legislative act of my second term in the Senate is to place my name as an original cosponsor on the balanced budget constitutional amendment offered today by the distinguished President pro tempore, the senior Senator from South Carolina, Senator THURMOND.

In my first Senate term, no other issues took a more prominent position on my own legislative agenda than that proposed by this joint resolution. The passage of time has done nothing but enhance the arguments in favor of constitutionally mandating the Congress to put the Federal Government's fiscal house in order.

The existence of $200 billion deficits is eloquent testimony to the inability of Congress to discipline itself. Despite statements of great determination to deal effectively with the deficit issue in this first session of the 99th Congress, past experience makes even the most optimistic of us doubt the possibilities of success.

It is even more disturbing, Mr. President, to know that even if the administration accomplishes its goal, 3 years from now the Federal deficit will still be $100 billion—$100 billion, Mr. President—a figure that just a few years ago was considered unconscionable and a recipe for economic disaster.

We have been told many times that a constitutional amendment will never pass the Congress and even if it did it can't work. However, the Senate did pass such an amendment in 1982 and I believe we can do so again.

In addition 32 States have approved calls for a constitutional convention to mandate a balanced budget. That is just two States short of the number required to force Congress to consider such a convention. While I have grave concerns over the wisdom of such a convention, it does demonstrate the strong will and support of the people of this country for action on achieving a balanced budget. It should put additional emphasis behind this amendment.

This joint resolution does not require the President to submit a balanced budget, but it does require the Congress to produce one, with certain exceptions. Deficit spending would be allowed only after three-fifths of the Congress approves such action. Of course the balanced budget requirements could be waived in time of war. It is also important to note that Congress would be required to adopt the balanced budget before the start of the fiscal year. Thus, the great uncertainty about what Congress will do when, would be remove, and replace with what I believe would be the single most important benefit of such an amendment—fiscal stability and dependability.

Mr. President the time is right, and the conditions are right to pass this much needed legislation. I ask for the support of my colleagues.

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I am pleased to again become an original cosponsor of legislation to establish a constitutional amendment requiring a balanced Federal budget. I am pleased that the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, Senator THURMOND, has introduced this legislation at the very outset of the 99th Congress.

The balanced budget amendment passed the Senate in the 97th Congress, but was rejected by the House. In the 98th Congress, the legislation was bottled up in the Senate Judiciary Committee by the foes of budgetary reform. In addition, the House refused to consider the balanced budget amendment.

The immensity of our Federal budget woes is reaching crisis proportions. The fiscal year 1985 budget deficit may exceed $200 billion. Budgetary reform should be the first order of business. This is why I actively support legislation to establish a constitutional amendment requiring a balanced Federal budget.

I feel strongly that a balanced budget amendment is the only means to force Congress to cut spending. The best way to reduce Federal spending is to enact a broad based spending freeze. I have developed a freeze that would have saved $16 billion this year if enacted in fiscal year 1984. This would have been done while still permitting new participants into Medicare and Social Security and allowing a Social Security COLA.

Support for a budget freeze is galvanizing. Democrats and Republicans are endorsing the freeze proposal as the most equitable means of budget cutting. That is, both domestic and defense spending should equally bear the burden of budget austerity.

Passing a balanced budget amendment to the Constitution would pave the way toward enactment of a budget freeze. This is why I support the balanced budget amendment and why I hope others will join me in support of this vital legislation.

Thank you, Mr. President.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, this will be the third Congress in which I have served. In each of those three Congresses, a resolution has been introduced calling for an amendment to the Constitution requiring a balanced budget. In only one of those Congresses did significant action take place on the bill. That occurred in 1982 when the Senate passed it and the House defeated the measure. Since 32 States have called for a Constitutional Convention to address the issue of a balanced budget amendment, Congress is being pressured to act quickly in order to avert such a convention.

The fundamental issue surrounding the balanced budget amendment is not that we must reduce the Federal deficit, there is practically unanimous agreement all constituencies on that matter. The question is when and how that deficit is to be reduced. The proposed amendment would provide that growth in spending and taxes not exceed the growth in national income and that receipts equal outlays. Our problem has not been that taxes have been too little but that spending has been too great. Over the past decade spending has been about 22.7 percent of the gross national product while taxes averaged around 19.4 percent. Receipts over that time have remained relatively stable around that average but spending has been steadily increasing over that period.

This resolution which we are introducing today would provide for the vehicle necessary to get this matter before the States for ratification. Over the past 4 years of my experience in the Senate the people have continuously expressed their desire that our Constitution provide for a balanced budget. It is time we move ahead with this measure. With the present growth in the Federal deficit, we do not have long before we reach the point of no return for our Nation's well being.

By Mr. GOLDWATER:

S.J. Res. 14. Joint resolution authorizing the President to advance Lt. Gen. Ira C. Eaker, USAF (ret.) and Lt. Gen. James H. Doolittle, USAF (ret.) to the grade of general on the retired list; to the Committee on Armed Services.

ADVANCEMENT OF CERTAIN PEOPLE TO THE GRADE OF GENERAL ON THE RETIRED LIST

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, it is my pleasure today to introduce a joint resolution authorizing the President of the United States to advance Ira C. Eaker and James H. Doolittle to the grade of general on the U.S. Air Force retired list.

As all Senators know, Ira Eaker and Jimmy Doolittle are two of our great American Air Force veterans. Both men served on active duty as lieutenant generals and have retired from the Air Force as lieutenant generals. It has been my feeling for many years that it is only right and fitting that, as a further tribute to their accomplishments and as a further indication of the esteem of their country, they should be advanced on the retired list to the grade of full general.

I will insert in the RECORD biographies of both General Eaker and General Doolittle, but I want to take a moment today to briefly tell the Senate a little about each of these unusual men. Jimmy Doolittle began on active duty in 1917, and was commissioned in 1920. On September 4 and 5, 1922, he made the first cross-country flight from Florida to California with only one stop. Over the next 2 years he earned a masters degree and a doctrate at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Over the better part of the next 10 years, Jimmy Doolittle was involved in the testing of high-speed aircraft. In 1932 he set the world's high-speed record for land planes. In 1940 he became president of the Institute of Aeronautical Science.

Jimmy Doolittle's role in the U.S. war effort in World War II is well known. He was instrumental in our initial wartime mobilization, and then led the first air raid on the Japanese mainland on April 18, 1942. He later commanded the 12th Air Force in North Africa, the 15th Air Force in the Mediterranean theater, and the 8th Air Force in the European and the Pacific theaters.

General Doolittle holds the Congressional Medal of Honor and numerous other awards for valor and achievement. He has been decorated by numerous foreign countries, including England, France, Belgium, Poland, China, Bolivia, and Ecuador. He is the winner of the Schneider and McKay trophies, the Harmon trophy, the Bendix trophy, and the Thompson trophy.

Now let me turn to Ira Eaker. General Eaker was commissioned in 1917 and completed his pilot's training in 1919. Early in his career General Eaker achieved a number of notable flight endurance records. In 1926 and 1927, he served as a pilot on one of the planes of a 22,000-mile goodwill tour of Central and South America. In 1929, he was the chief pilot on the refueling endurance flight of an Army aircraft that established a world flight endurance record of almost 150 hours. He made the first transcontinental flight using inflight refueling from California to New York. General Eaker continued his flight achievements, when he made the first blind transcontinental flight in 1936, flying by instruments from New York to Los Angeles.

In the mid-1930's, General Eaker coauthored with Hap Arnold, later the commanding general of the U.S. Army Air Forces, the first of what was to be three books. Their first collaboration, "This Flying Game," dealt with the aviation industry. In 1937, General Eaker and Hap Arnold wrote their second book, "Winged Warfare." Their third book was published in 1942, and was titled "Army Flyer."

In February 1942, General Eaker was assigned as commander of the 1st American Air Headquarters in Europe, the 8th Bomber Command. In December 1942 he became commander of the 8th Air Force. Later he became commanding general of all U.S. Army Air Forces in the United Kingdom. And in January 1944 he was named air commander in chief of the Mediterranean Allied Force Air Forces having under his command the 12th and 15th U.S. Air Forces and the British Desert and Balkan Air Forces. At the end of his active duty career, General Eaker was named deputy commander of the Army Air Forces and chief of the air staff. When he retired he had more than 12,000 flying hours.

General Eaker's decorations include the Distinguished Service Medal, the Navy Distinguished Service Medal, and numerous other awards for valor and achievement. He has also been decorated by a number of countries, including Bolivia, Chile, Peru, Venezuela, England, Brazil, the Soviet Union, Yugoslavia, France, Italy, and Poland. In 1976 he was presented the Wright trophy. In 1979 General Eaker was presented with a special Congressional Gold Medal named in his honor.

Mr. President, there are no two individuals more deserving of holding the highest rank in our Air Force than Ira Eaker and Jimmy Doolittle. I would urge my colleagues to expeditiously approve this legislation. I would ask unanimous consent that more detailed biographies of General Eaker and General Doolittle be placed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

There being no objection, the detailed biographies were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LT. GEN. IRA C. EAKER

Ira C. Eaker, aviation pioneer and Air Force leader, was born in Field Creek, Texas, April 13, 1896 and raised in southeastern Oklahoma near Durant. In 1917, he graduated from Southeastern Normal School in Durant and entered First Officers' Training Camp, receiving his commission as a second lieutenant in the Infantry Reserve, August 15, 1917. After completing flying instruction at Austin and Kelly Field, Texas, he received his pilot's rating in October 1919.

In July of that year, he was transferred to the Philippine Islands, where he served in a variety of assignments, including air officer with the Philippine Department and commander of the Philippine Air Depot in Manila.

Eaker returned to the United States in January 1922 for duty at Mitchell Field, N.Y., where he commanded the Fifth Aero Squadron and later was post adjutant.

In June 1924, he became assistant in the office of the Chief of the Air Corps in Washington.

From December 1926 to May 1927, he served as a pilot on one of the planes of the Pan American Flight, which made a 22,065-mile goodwill tour of Central and South America.

He then became executive officer in the Office of the Assistant Secretary of War, in Washington, and in September 1928, was assigned as the operations and line maintenance officer at Bolling Field, in Washington.

While on that duty, he served as chief pilot on the refueling endurance flight of the Army plane, Question Mark which established a world flight endurance record of 150 hours, 40 minutes, and 14 seconds—flying over Los Angeles from January 1 to 7, 1929.

The next year, he made the first transcontinental flight using in-flight refueling from San Francisco to Mitchell Field, N.Y.

From June 1932 to September 1933 he attended the University of Southern California, where he received a Bachelor of Arts degree in journalism.

In October 1933, he was assigned to March Field, Calif., where he commanded the 17th Pursuit Squadron and later served successively as intelligence, operations and public relations officer in the 34th Pursuit Squadron. From February to May 1934, he commanded Air Mail Route 4, Western Zone, Army Air Corps Mail Operations.

In the summer of 1935, he was detached for duty with the Navy aboard the aircraft carrier Lexington, where he participated in Navy maneuvers in Hawaii and Guam.

He entered the Air Corps Tactical School at Maxwell Field, Ala. in August 1935, and upon graduation the following June, entered Command and Staff School at Fort Leavenworth, Kans., graduating in June 1937.

While at school, Eaker co-authored with H. H. (Hap) Arnold, later the Commanding General of the U.S. Army Air Forces, the first of their three books, This Flying Game. It dealt with "the aviation industry and its allied trades, businesses and professions." The book, published in 1936, provided a detailed account of every aspect of the Army Air Corps.

In 1936, he made the first "blind" transcontinental flight, flying by instruments from New York to Los Angeles.

He became Assistant Chief of the Information Division in the Office of the Chief of the Air Corps, in Washington, in June 1937.

In 1937, he and Arnold wrote their second book, Winged Warfare. This discussion of all phases of air warfare was generally hailed as an admirable work, readily intelligible to any layman. It stressed the need for an Air Force separate from the Army and Navy. They also advocated the separation of air fighting echelons into three subordinate commands—a fighter command, a bomber command, and a home defense command.

In November 1940, he assumed command of the 20th Pursuit Group, Hamilton Field, Calif.

In August 1941, he served a special tour of duty in England with the Royal Air Force flying new types of fighter aircraft and observing British fighter-control methods.

The last book co-authored by Eaker and Arnold was Army Flyer in 1942. It is a flying officer's primer which explains the duties and rewards of a pilot's career from flying cadet to air general. All royalties from Army Flyer were deposited in the Army Air Force Trust Fund to assist the widows and children of officers and enlisted men of the Army who lost their lives in the air in World War II.

In February 1942, Eaker was assigned as commander of the first American air headquarters in Europe in World War II, the VII Bomber Command.

In December of that year, he became commander of the Eighth Air Force in England. Later, he became commanding general of all U.S. Army Air Forces in the United Kingdom, and in January 1944, was named Air Commander-in-Chief of the Mediterranean Allied Air Forces, having under his command the 12th and 15th U.S. Air Forces and the British Desert and Balkan Air Forces.

During the war, he personally flew many missions in Europe, including the first heavy bomber raid on occupied Europe in August 1942, and in June 1944, the first shuttle bombing raid from Italy to Germany using the Soviet Union as the eastern terminus. In August 1944, he flew a fighter plane supporting the invasion of Southern France.

In April 1945, Eaker was named Deputy Commander of the Army Air Force and Chief of the Air Staff. He retired from active duty on July 31, 1947 after more than 30 years of service during which he flew more than 12,000 hours as a pilot. Although he left the service less than a month before the Air Force became a separate service, General Eaker was instrumental in planning and drafting legislation for the birth of the separate Air Force.

General Eaker's military decorations include the Distinguished Service Medal with one oak leaf cluster, Navy Distinguished Service Medal, Legion of Merit, Silver Star, Distinguished Flying Cross with one oak leaf cluster, and Air Medal.

His foreign decorations include the Bolivian Order of Condor of the Andes (1927); the Chilean Order Al Merito (Officer) (1927); Peruvian Order of the Sun of Peru, Officer (1927); Venezuelan Order of the Liberator, Officer (1927); Knight of the British Empire (1943); Brazilian Order of the Southern Cross, Grand Official Order (1944); Russian Order of Kutusov, Second Degree (1945); Yugoslavian Partisan Star, First Class (1945); French Legion of Honor, Grand Officer (1945); French Croix de Guerre with Palm (1945); Italian Grand Master of the Order of Saints Maurice and Lazarus (1945); British Knight Commander of the Bath (1945); Brazilian Order of Aeronautical Merit (1945); Polish Military Order of the Gold Cross of Merit with Swords (1945).

Since his retirement from the military, General Eaker has energetically pursued his interests in aviation. From 1947 to 1957 he served as Vice President of the Hughes Tool Company with the responsibility for guiding its wholly-owned subsidiary in Culver City, Calif., the Hughes Aircraft Company. He helped Hughes Aircraft become one of America's leading aircraft technology and electronics firms.

He left Hughes in 1957 to become a vice president and director of Douglas Aircraft Company and returned to Washington, D.C. Also in 1957, General Eaker began writing a weekly column on military affairs which was syndicated by the Copley Newspapers. His column appeared in over 180 newspapers and continued for 18 years.

Since his military retirement, for more than 30 years, General Eaker has written many articles for a variety of national magazines and has lectured about twice a month at the USAF Air University, USAF Academy, the Royal Air Force Staff College and at numerous other air power symposia and conventions. His articles and speeches have stressed the need for a strong aerospace defense force and the growing threat of the Soviet military. Over 70 of General Eaker's articles and speeches have appeared in the Congressional Record.

In 1976 he was presented the Wright Trophy for devoting a lifetime to the building and sustainment of American air power. The permanent trophy is on display at the Smithsonian Air and Space Museum in Washington, D.C.

On December 17, 1979, General Eaker was presented with a special Congressional Gold Medal, named in his honor. The presentation date coincided with the 76th Anniversary of the Wright Brothers' first successful airplane flight.

The citation accompanying the award read in part:

In the early days of flight, he developed and tested procedures for aerial refueling and instrument flying that today are still indispensable to air operations.

In the Second World War, General Eaker organized American and British air forces and led them in campaigns which brought victory for the allies at a far lower cost in blood and treasure than could reasonably have been expected.

Following the war's end and subsequent service as Chief of the Air Staff, he devoted himself to promoting air power and national defense.

General Eaker's tireless efforts, spanning well over half a century, have benefited his country enormously and have earned for him the greatest admiration, gratitude and respect.

Other aviation pioneers honored with gold medals include the Wright Brothers, Charles Lindberg, and Brigadier General William L., "Billy" Mitchell.

General Eaker, now 87, and his wife, Ruth, reside in Washington, D.C.

LT. GEN. JAMES H. DOOLITTLE

James Harold Doolittle was born in Alamada, California, December 14, 1896. He was educated in Nome, Alaska; Los Angeles Jr. College; and spent a year at the University of California School of Mines.

Enlisting as a Flying Cadet in the Signal Corps Reserve October 6, 1917, General Doolittle was assigned to the School of Military Aeronautics at the University of California, and upon completion of that course went to Rockwell Field, California, for further training. He was commissioned a second lieutenant in the Signal Corps Reserve, Aviation Section, March 11, 1918.

During 1918 General Doolittle served at Camp Dick, Texas; Wright Field, Ohio; Gerstner Field, Louisiana; and as flight and gunnery instructor at Rockwell Field, and in July 1919 he was assigned to the 104th Aero Squadron at Kelly Field, Texas. That October 9th he was transferred to the 90th Aero Squadron at Eagle Pass, Texas, for border patrol duty.

On July 1, 1920, General Doolittle was commissioned a second lieutenant in the Regular Army, Air Service; was promoted to first lieutenant; and entered the Air Service Mechanical School at Kelly Field. In August 1922 he was ordered to McCook Field, Ohio, to take the Aeronautical Engineering course. That September 4 and 5 he made the first cross-country flight, from Pablo Beach, Florida, to San Diego, California, with one stop, which brought him international fame. Also during 1922 he was awarded his Bachelor of Arts degree from the University of California.

Entering Massachusetts Institute of Technology for special engineering courses in July 1923, General Doolittle was graduated the following year with the degree of Master of Science, and a year later was awarded the degree of Doctor of Science. During March 1924 he also served temporarily at McCook Field conducting aircraft acceleration tests. Returning to McCook Field in June 1925, he was sent to the Naval Air Station at Washington, D.C., that August for special training in flying high speed seaplanes. During that assignment he served for a short period at Mitchel Field, New York, with the Naval Test Board.

Granted a leave of absence in April 1926, General Doolittle went to South America on airplane demonstration flights. After his return to the United States he was in Walter Reed General Hospital until April 1927, when he was again assigned to McCook Field for experimental work and additional duty as instructor with the Organized Reserves of the Fifth Corps Area, 385th Bomb Squadron. In January 1928 he made experimental flights in South America.

Returning to Mitchel Field in September 1928, General Doolittle assisted in the development of fog flying equipment. During this assignment the now almost universally used artificial horizontal and directional gyroscopes were developed and he accomplished the first flight completely by instruments. On January 20, 1930, he was named advisor for the Army on the building of the Floyd Bennett Airport in New York City. General Doolittle resigned his Regular Army commission February 15, 1930.

Commissioned a major, Specialist, in the Officers Reserve Corps, on March 5, 1930, during that year General Doolittle made several flying experiments. He was then named manager of the Aviation Department of the Shell Oil Company, and in that capacity conducted numerous aviation tests. At various times he went on active duty with the Army to conduct tests, and in 1932 set the world's high speed record for land planes. In April 1934 he was appointed a member of the Army Board to study Air Corps organization, and a year later he was transferred to the Air Corps Reserve. General Doolittle became President of the Institute of Aeronautical Science in 1940.

Ordered to active duty July 1, 1940, General Doolittle was Assistant District Supervisor of the Central Air Corps Procurement District at Indianapolis, Indiana, moving to Detroit, Michigan, in that capacity November 16, 1940, where he worked with the large automobile manufacturers on the conversion of automobile plants to airplane parts manufacturing plants. The following August he went to England as a member of a special mission. On January 9, 1942, he was assigned to Army Air Force headquarters in Washington, D.C.

General Doolittle led the first aerial raid on the Japanese mainland on April 18, 1942. That July he joined the Eighth Air Force in England, and the following September assumed command of the 12th Air Force in North Africa. In March 1943 he became commanding general of the 15th Air Force in the Mediterranean Theater, and from January 1944 to September 1945 he commanded the Eighth Air Force in the European and Pacific Theaters. On May 10, 1946, he reverted to inactive Reserve status.

Returning to the Shell Oil Company, General Doolittle became a Vice President and later a Director. In March 1951 he was appointed a Special Assistant to the Chief of Staff of the Air Force at Washington, D.C., in a civilian status.

His decorations include the Medal of Honor, Distinguished Service Medal with one Oak Leaf Cluster, Silver Star, Distinguished Flying Cross with two Oak Leaf Clusters, Bronze Star, and the Air Medal with three Oak Leaf Clusters.

He has also been awarded the British Order of the Bath (Knight Commander); French Legion of Honor (Grand Officer) and Croix de Guerre with Palm; Belgian Order of the Crown (Grand Officer) and Croix de Guerre with Palm; Polish Order of Restoration of Poland; Chinese Yun-Hwei (Class III); Bolivian Order of the Condor Medal; and Ecuadorean Abdon Calderon (First Class).

His trophies include the Schneider and Mackay Trophies in 1925; the Harmon Trophy in 1930; the Bendix Trophy in 1931; and the Thompson Trophy in 1932.

General Doolittle and his wife, Josephine, have two children, James H., Jr., and John P., both in the Air Force.

S.J. Res. 15. Joint resolution to designate May 7, 1985, as "Helsinki Human Rights Day"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

HELSINKI HUMAN RIGHTS DAY

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, I am pleased to introduce today with Senator GRASSLEY and 27 of our colleagues a joint resolution that authorizes and requests the President of the United States to designate May 7, 1985, as "Helsinki Human Rights Day."

This year marks the 10th anniversary of the signing of the Final Act of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe, often referred to as the Helsinki Accords.

On May 7 of this year a meeting of experts on human rights and fundamental freedoms will be convened in Ottawa, Canada, to discuss questions concerning respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms as embodied in the Helsinki accords. This meeting will be attended by representatives from the 35 nations who joined together in signing the Helsinki accords on August 1, 1975.

The principles of this resolution are universal. We are all members of the human family, and so long as any member of that family does not enjoy full human dignity and rights, none of us is truly free. While men and women are oppressed in other lands, our freedom is only partial. But so long as we defend the freedom of all men, the tyranny under which they live is mitigated.

In agreeing to the Helsinki accords, the signatory nations have acknowledged their adherence to the principles of freedom. Not, perhaps, to the sophisticated modes of parliamentary democracy, but to the basic rights of citizens to enjoy at least the minimal respect by their government of their individuality and personal worth. In the contemporary world where governments seek the recognition of other nations, this is the least we can demand.

Unfortunately, several signatory nations have not adhered to the human rights standards of this agreement. The Governments of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Poland, and Romania, have not fulfilled their commitments to the Helsinki accords by denying individuals their inherent rights to freedom of religion, thought, conscience, and belief.

By proclaiming May 7, 1985, the opening date of the Ottawa meeting of experts on human rights and fundamental freedoms, as "Helsinki Human Rights Day," we are reaffirming our commitment to the principles upon which our own democracy was founded. We are sending a message to the signatory nations, particularly the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe, that we expect them to live up to their international agreements.

Mr. President, I urge each Member of this body to let his commitment be known. In the words of President Gerald Ford at the signing ceremony of the Helsinki accords:

> History will judge this conference not by what we say here today, but by what we do tomorrow—not by the promises we make but by the promises we keep.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of this resolution be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being on objection, the joint resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S.J. RES. 15

Whereas this meeting is called for in the concluding document of the Madrid Review Conference of September 9, 1983; and

Whereas this meeting will be attended by representatives of all Helsinki signatory nations: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That—

(1) May 7, 1985, the opening date of the Ottawa meeting of experts on human rights and fundamental freedoms, is designated as "Helsinki Human Rights Day";

(2) the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation reasserting the American commitment to full implementation of the human rights and humanitarian provisions of the Helsinki Accords, urging all signatory nations to abide by their obligations under the Helsinki Accords, and encouraging the people of the United States to join the President and Congress in observance of "Helsinki Human Rights Day" with appropriate programs, ceremonies, and activities;

(3) the President is further requested to continue his efforts to achieve full implementation of the human rights provisions of the Helsinki Accords by raising the issue of noncompliance with the Governments of the Soviet Union, Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Poland, and Romania at every available opportunity;

(4) the President is further requested to convey to all signatories of the Helsinki Accords that respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms is a vital element of further progress in the ongoing Helsinki process; and

(5) the President is authorized to convey to allies and friends of the United States that unity on the question of respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms is the most effective means to promote the full implementation of the human rights and humanitarian provisions of the Helsinki Accords.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Senate is directed to transmit copies of this joint resolution to the President, the Secretary of State, and the Ambassadors of the thirty-four Helsinki signatory nations.

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today to cosponsor a joint resolution designating May 7, 1985 as "Helsinki Human Rights Day" introduced by my good friend, the junior Senator from Arizona.

As a member of the Commission of Security and Cooperation in Europe, the Helsinki Commission, I closely follow the human rights situation in Europe. When the Helsinki accords were signed, many believed it was the dawning of a new age for human rights. Although most nations which signed the accords have excellent records on human rights, the nations most in need of human rights reform, the Soviet Union and its satellites, have not abided by the accords and, in most cases, actually have become more oppressive.

The most significant and objectionable example of Soviet human rights disdain is the declining level of Jewish emigration. In 1979, over 51,000 Soviet Jews were allowed to emigrate; under 1,000 were allowed in 1984. In signing the Helsinki accords, the signatory nations acknowledged basic human rights. It is now clear that the Soviet Union regards these accords with contempt.

On May 7, 1985, representatives from the 35 nations who signed the accords and human rights experts will meet in Ottawa, Canada. They will discuss the current state of the Helsinki accords. It is therefore appropriate and imperative that the United States reaffirm its commitment to the Final Act of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe, which is in its 10th year of existence.

I strongly urge my colleagues to join me in cosponsoring this resolution.

Thank you, Mr. President.

By Mr. PRESSLER:

S.J. Res. 16. Joint resolution expressing support for the Rural Electrification Administration; to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry.

RURAL ELECTRIFICATION ADMINISTRATION

Mr. PRESSLER. Mr. President, today I am submitting a resolution expressing the sense of the Congress' support for the Rural Electrification Administration. In recent years, the future of the REA Program has become a subject of a great deal of discussion and concern to Congress and to rural America. The latest flurry of activity has been over the proposed elimination of the Engineering Standards Division of the REA Program. The Engineering Standards Division establishes and enforces standards for safety, quality, and efficiency in the construction of rural electric systems, and also provides technical assistance to REA borrowers. This function is important in assuring that rural areas are provided with high quality and safe electrical power.

Since the establishment of the REA Program, rural areas have benefited from the services provided by the program. I can remember when the local rural electric cooperative, with the help of the REA, brought electricity to our family farm near Humbolt, SD. That was a very memorable day which might not have occurred had it not been for the REA Program. Sparsely populated rural areas are not very profitable areas to be served by power companies. In many areas, rural electric cooperatives serve less than one customer per mile of line. This results in high construction and maintenance costs, with a minimum amount of revenue. Many of these areas would not be served by public utilities.

Without the REA Program, many rural areas would not have had electrical service in the past, and if an effective REA Program is not continued in the future, electric rates may increase to a level beyond the financial means of many farmers and ranchers. Currently, the farm sector is struggling through some of the most severe financial troubles in history, and most farmers cannot afford to pay substantially higher electric bills. For this reason, I believe it is important that we send the administration and rural Americans a message that Congress knows the importance of the REA

Program and will continue to support an effective rural electrification program. Passage of this resolution would send such a message. I urge my colleagues to join me in this effort.

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 4—RELATING TO A SPECIAL ENVOY FOR NORTHERN IRELAND

Mr. MOYNIHAN submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

S. CON. RES. 4

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring),

Whereas the United States enjoys a distinguished tradition of appointing special envoys to help settle conflicts in troubled areas of the world; and

Whereas the conflict in Northern Ireland continues; and

Whereas a lasting and peaceful settlement in Northern Ireland can only be reached through political and diplomatic discussion and accommodation based on the consent and respecting the rights of all concerned; and

Whereas the terrorism associated with the conflict in Northern Ireland on all sides is thoroughly rejected by all Americans of good will; and

Whereas the Government of Ireland and the Government of Great Britain are closely cooperating in the effort to defeat terrorism; and

Whereas bonds of common language, shared culture and democratic institutions have long and amiably bound the people of the United States with the peoples of Ireland and Great Britain; and

Whereas a New Ireland Forum has been convened by the major parties of the Irish nationalist tradition to provide them an opportunity to explore means of achieving peace and stability in a new Ireland through the democratic process; and

Whereas the process of Anglo-Irish cooperation provides an avenue wherein the governments of Ireland and Great Britain can jointly bring forward proposals to assist in the realization of peace and reconciliation between the two great traditions in Ireland; and

Whereas President John F. Kennedy stated in his St. Patrick's Day proclamation of March 17, 1962 that "ours is a nation founded, sustained and now preserved in the cause of Liberty," which "demands much of those who would live by it;" and

Whereas President Jimmy Carter stated on August 30, 1977 that "the United States wholeheartedly supports peaceful means for finding a just solution" and declared that, in the event of a peaceful settlement there, "the U.S. Government would be prepared to join with others to see how additional job-creating investment could be encouraged, to the benefit of all the people of Northern Ireland"; and

Whereas President Ronald Reagan on March 17, 1983 called upon "people everywhere to turn away from the moral bankruptcy of the men of violence and to help or heed the call for peace and reconciliation that is the true message which St. Patrick himself first brought to Ireland"; and

Whereas on July 27, 1983, for the first time in history a senior official delegation from the Dail and Seanad Eireann visited the floor of the Senate in demonstration of the shared purpose and determination of legislators in Ireland and the United States to promote an early and peaceful settlement of the conflict in Northern Ireland; and

Whereas on May 2, 1984, the New Ireland Forum issued a Report suggesting bases for discussion of Northern Ireland among the governments of Ireland and Great Britain, which was commended by the House of Representatives on May 22, 1984 and by the Senate on May 24, 1984; and

Whereas these expressions of support for and commitment to peaceful settlement of the conflict in Northern Ireland ought to be more fully realized at the earliest possible opportunity: Now, therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That it is the sense of Congress that the President should appoint a highly qualified and appropriately experienced special diplomatic envoy to investigate and report how best the United States could actively assist the governments of Ireland and Great Britain and the communities in Northern Ireland to arrive at an early, just and peaceful resolution of the present conflict in Northern Ireland.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I am today submitting for the consideration of the Senate a concurrent resolution expressing the sense of the Congress that the President should appoint a highly qualified and appropriately experienced special diplomatic envoy to investigate and report how best the United States could actively assist the Governments of Ireland and Great Britain and the communities in Northern Ireland to arrive at an early, just, and peaceful resolution of the present conflict in Northern Ireland.

Senators KENNEDY and DODD join me as cosponsors of this resolution.

The United States has a long experience of sending special envoys to establish and develop the grounds for political dialog among parties at odds with each other, beginning, one might say, with President Theodore Roosevelt's successful mediation between Russia and Japan in 1905, for which he was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize in 1906. It is only natural that the U.S. Government should offer to make a similar contribution in the context of the conflict in Northern Ireland.

That there is an American dimension to the tragedy of Northern Ireland is indisputable. There is a question, however, whether the United States can make a constructive contribution to the resolution of the continuing conflict there. More than 2,000 persons have died in a decade and a half of violence and strife in Northern Ireland, conflict that is sustained by continuing political stalemate.

The stalemate must be resolved by the people of Northern Ireland themselves, in cooperation with the Governments of Great Britain and the Republic of Ireland. Outside powers, including the United States, cannot impose solutions or insist on defining the shape of the final settlement. But we ought at minimum seek to assist these two governments, both friends of the United States, in reaching accord.

In November 1984 a long-awaited meeting of the Prime Ministers of Ireland and Great Britain, held in London to discuss Northern Ireland, ended without an agreement being reached. Prime Ministers Garret Fitzgerald and Margaret Thatcher did announce, however, their intention to meet again within the next several weeks to continue their official discussions about Northern Ireland. One cannot but look forward to this imminent meeting with hope that a basis for sustained dialog may be established. In this context it is time for the United States to make clear its desire to assist in the achievement of a peaceful resolution of the conflict in Northern Ireland.

Americans have an obligation to assist in every constructive way. As President John F. Kennedy said to the Irish Parliament on June 20, 1963, during his historic visit to his ancestral homeland.

* * * no nation, large or small, can be indifferent to the fate of others near or far.

Indeed this was the theme of each of President Kennedy's St. Patrick's Day proclamations, which I had the honor to draft. In 1962, President Kennedy said:

* * * ours is a nation founded, sustained, and now preserved in the cause of liberty. None more than the Irish can attest the power of that cause once it has gripped a nation's soul.

It is well to love liberty, for it demands much of those who would live by it. Liberty is not content to share mankind.

The appointment of a special envoy to actively search, through communication with all the interested and responsible parties, for means through which the United States could assist in the settlement of the conflict is consistent with, and builds upon, the official statements of recent American Presidents.

In his famous address to the Irish Parliament in 1963, President Kennedy reminded us all of the interlocking histories of Ireland and America. Kennedy recalled the mission of Benjamin Franklin to the Irish Parliament in 1772:

It was neither independent nor free from discrimination at the time, but Franklin reported its members "disposed to be friends of America." "By joining our interest with theirs," he said, "a more equitable treatment * * * might be obtained for both nations."

Our interests have been joined ever since. Franklin sent leaflets to Irish freedom fighters. O'Connell was influenced by Washington, and Emmet influenced Lincoln. Irish volunteers played so predominant a role in the American army that Lord Mountjoy lamented in the British Parliament that "we have lost America through the Irish."

In 1977, President Carter noted that the desparate economic situation in Northern Ireland contributed materially to the despair that resulted almost directly in support for, or acquiescence in, the violence of terrorism.

On August 30, President Carter said:

It is natural that Americans are deeply concerned about the continuing conflict and violence in Northern Ireland. We know the overwhelming majority of the people there reject the bomb and the bullet. The United States wholeheartedly supports peaceful means for finding a just solution that involves both parts of the community of Northern Ireland and protects human rights and guarantees freedom from discrimination * * *

* * * It is still true that a peaceful settlement would contribute immeasurably to stability in Northern Ireland and so enhance the prospects for increased investment. In the event of such a settlement, the U.S. Government would be prepared to join with others to see how additional job-creating investment could be encouraged, to the benefit of all the people of Northern Ireland.

It is very much in this tradition of Presidential expressions of concern for Ireland, and support for the process of peaceful reconciliation in Northern Ireland, that I am today introducing this resolution calling for the appointment of a special envoy for Northern Ireland.

I would emphasize that my cosponsors and I do not intend that Americans should intervene and attempt to impose solutions. Our purpose is quite simply to state that we believe the United States should be actively offering to assist the Governments of Ireland and Great Britain in the search for solutions.

It is past time that the U.S. Government engaged more actively in the search for peace in Northern Ireland. Should others agree, I would be happy to list them as cosponsors of the concurrent resolution.

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 5—TO ESTABLISH A JOINT COMMITTEE ON INTELLIGENCE OVERSIGHT

Mr. QUAYLE (for himself and Mr. FORD) submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration:

S. CON. RES. 5

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there is hereby established a Joint Committee on Intelligence Oversight (hereinafter referred to as the "joint committee") which shall be composed of ten members appointed as follows:

(1) five members of the Senate, three to be appointed by the majority leader of the Senate and two to be appointed by the minority leader of the Senate; and

(2) five members of the House of Representatives, three to be appointed by the majority leader of the House of Representatives and two to be appointed by the minority leader of the House of Representatives.

(b) The joint committee shall select a chairman and a vice chairman from among its members at the beginning of each Congress. The vice chairman shall act in the place and stead of the chairman in the absence of the chairman. The chairmanship and the vice chairmanship shall alternate between the Senate and the House of Representatives with each Congress. The chairman during each even numbered Congress shall be selected by the Members of the House of Representatives on the joint committee from among their number and the chairman during each odd-numbered Congress shall be selected by the Members of the Senate on the joint committee from among their number. The vice chairman during each Congress shall be chosen in the same manner from that House of Congress other than the House of Congress of which the chairman is a Member.

SEC. 2. (a) The jurisdiction and duties of the joint committee shall be as provided in section 3 of Senate Resolution 400, 94th Congress, relating to the Select Committee on Intelligence, approved May 19, 1976.

(b) All bills, resolutions, and other matters in the Senate or the House of Represenatives relating primarily to the jurisdiction of the joint committee shall be referred to the joint committee. The members of the joint committee who are Members of the Senate shall from time to time report to the Senate, and the members of the joint committee who are Members of the House of Representatives shall from time to time report to the House, by bill or otherwise, their recommendations with respect to matters within the jurisdiction of their respective Houses which are (1) referred to the joint committee, or (2) otherwise within the jurisdiction of the joint committee.

SEC. 3. The joint committee shall be administered in accordance with the provisions of sections 4 through 14 and section 16 of Senate Resolution 400, 94th Congress, except that all staff shall be appointed jointly by the chairman and vice chairman and such appointments shall be made without regard to political affiliation and solely on the basis of fitness to perform the duties of the position.

SEC. 4. For purposes of the resolution, all references in Senate Resolution 400 to—

(1) the term "select committee" shall be treated as referring to the "joint committee"; and

(2) the term "Senate" shall be treated as referring to either House of the Congress, subject to the rules and procedures of the House of Representatives.

Mr. QUAYLE. Mr. President, today, on behalf of myself and Senator FORD, I will be submitting resolutions as reported by the temporary Select Committee on Committee Reorganization. This committee met and reported out a consensus document that specified suggestions for changes in committee structure and changes for the rules.

Since the reporting of this committee, the respective parties have met. This morning, our party had a rather spirited discussion about the recommendations. The Senate majority leader pointed out this morning that we are going to proceed along trying to see which recommendations can, in fact, be implemented. Working groups are being formed.

I am simply submitting this concurrent resolution today as well as Senate Resolution 31 as was specified in the statute on the creation of this committee last year.

Mr. President, I think we do have a window of opportunity to see something accomplished to enhance the process that the Senate operates under presently. I am very hopeful that these recommendations will finally be adopted by the Senate, although I know that the path to final adoption will be perhaps at least contentious, and, at most, not terribly pleasant for all, but I think if we look at it collectively as a whole that these recommendations certainly go in the right direction.

The select committee was established last June under an amendment sponsored by the majority and minority leaders, Senators BAKER and BYRD. Its function was to study the Senate committee system and make recommendations to improve its functioning. These resolutions are the product of our 2 days of hearings, during which the majority leader, the assistant majority leader and the chairmen and ranking minority members of the Appropriations, Budget and Armed Services Committees all testified, as well as our discussions with our colleagues and our study of past reform efforts.

It is clear that if we are going to make some changes in how our committees conduct their business and how the institution of the Senate makes policy, now is the time. In the month of January, before we organize for a new Congress, before we choose our committee assignments, and before we become involved in the legislative process once again, we are on the brink of an opportunity for reform. If we don't act now, we will operate during the 99th Congress as we operated during the 98th Congress. I commend the leadership for refraining from making committee assignments so that the select committee would have this opportunity to present its suggestions to the full Senate.

Reform is a popular concept—in theory. We all talk about how repetitive our fiscal processes are, how we need to change the functioning of the committee system and how floor procedures are abused. Toward the end of the 98th Congress, column after column of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD was filled with descriptions of the problems, difficulties and inefficiencies that hindered the timely and effective functioning of the Senate. From our most senior colleague, the distinguished JOHN STENNIS, to our most junior, DAN EVANS, we lamented the disintegration of the Senate as an institution and the loss of its public reputation as an effective policymaker.

Mr. President, it is easy enough to talk about change, but the time has now come for the Senate to act. The enactment of reform takes courage because change always comes with a price tag and is a step into the unknown. As individual senators we need to exercise selfrestraint, which requires some sacrifice, so that the Senate as an institution will benefit. We cannot complain that we are not taken seriously if we are not willing to consider serious reform.

Serious reform must address the proliferation of the number of committees and subcommittees, the number of staff, the number of floor amendments, the number of cloture votes, the number of rollcall votes, the number of fiscal processes. As a consequence of this proliferation, we have trivialized the matters with which we are concerned, using our processes more and more to emphasize small issues rather than large ones. For individual Senators the price of change may be the loss of a committee assignment, but collectively we stand to gain if the committee system operates more effectively and efficiently. The institution of the Senate stands to gain if we reassert its historical prerogative of balanced and informed policymaking and its tradition of dramatic and meaningful debate.

The select committee's resolutions incorporate alterations in the committee system that address these problems of proliferation and trivialization. A complete summary of the select committee's recommendations is appended to this statement, but I would like to briefly describe a few of them. The recommendations include reductions in committee sizes, fewer assignments per Senator, fewer subcommittees, and fewer chairmanships per Senator in order to involve Senators more deeply and thoroughly in decisionmaking and prevent the delegation of too much authority to staff. We also recommend the establishment of a temporary select committee to reform the budget process, with particular attention to the possible benefits of instituting a 2-year budget process and eliminating some of the redundancy of the three-layer authorization-appropriation-budget process.

While the select committee's juridiction and the resolutions that we have reported are limited to the committee system, it is clear that the committee system operates in the context of the Senate and that neither the problems of the committee system nor the problems of the Senate can be adequately addressed unless the entire institution is examined. Therefore, the committee's report discusses not only committee system reform, but also proposes steps the committee believes essential to the improvement of the environment in which the committee system operates—the institution of the Senate. In the report the select committee recommends a germaneness rule, invoked by 60 percent of those present and voting, and recommends that a 60-percent majority be required to overturn rulings of the Chair that an amendment is nongermane. In addition the select committee recommends that unlimited debate be permitted only on substantive issues by providing for a 2-hour time limit on the motion to proceed and by making cloture not only more difficult to invoke, but more effective once invoked.

In my opinion we should go further. We should require a two-thirds majority of those present and voting to invoke cloture and provide for an effective post-cloture debate limitation restricting all debate on the bill and amendments to 20 hours. We should also require a two-thirds vote to overrule the chair on a question of germaneness once cloture has been invoked. In order to reduce the number of rollcall votes, I think we should exercise self-restraint in supporting requests for the yeas and nays and revert to the custom of earlier years when Members did not support such requests unless urged to do so by leadership.

Mr. President, the time for action is now. We have done enough talking. Senator FORD and I have presented a package of proposals for consideration by the Senate and we believe our suggestions are workable solutions. It is crucial that the Senate act in January, before we become too busy with our other duties. We must take advantage of this window of opportunity so generously extended by the leadership. To fail to act now is to actively endorse our current committee system and Senate floor procedures, to actively encourage the continued proliferation of committee assignments, subcommittees and staff. To fail to act now is to evade responsibility for the structuring of our own institution. To fail to act now is to indicate that we lack both courage and restraint.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, today I am joining my cochairman of the Senate Select Committee to Study the Senate Committee System, the junior Senator from Indiana, Mr. QUAYLE, in introducing two resolutions growing out of the work of that temporary committee.

The proposed changes contained in the resolutions are the recommendations spelled out in the select committee's report, filed on December 15, 1984. As that report stated, while each member of the committee voted to approve the committee's report, such approval did not mean approval by each member of all the recommendations contained in the report.

There is widespread belief that changes need to be made to improve Senate operations. There is, however considerable diversity of opinion on just what such changes should be.

The resolutions we are introducing today will be appropriately referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration. That committee will promptly address these resolutions, and others making different recommendations for rules changes, and in due course report to the full Senate. What we need now is the help of all Members of the Senate so that our consideration can be as broad as possible.

The subject matter of appropriate procedure and committee structure in the Senate is complex and vitally important. We must act on this agenda, but not in haste.

It is my view that proponents of change carry a heavy burden of proof. In the final analysis, it is my judgment that we can meet that burden. To do so we must probe deeply and keep open minds.

Much of the discontent and many of the complaints I have heard expressed about the operations in the Senate may have little, if anything, to do with simple organization or procedure in the Senate. It is possible that far more basic policy questions are involved in order to balance the respective powers and rights of individual Senators, and the leadership of the Senate and its committees.

Our recommendation of the select committee in which I am especially interested, and for which there is wide and growing support, relates to the question of going to a 2-year cycle on budget and appropriations. The select committee proposes the creation of a temporary Senate committee to consider 2-year budget legislation and other proposals to improve the budget process.

In September 1981, I introduced the first Senate bill to establish a 2-year budget and appropriation cycle. In January 1982, Senator QUAYLE introduced a different bill for the same purpose.

In August 1982, Senator QUAYLE and I introduced a new bill in which we eliminated the differences in our two previous separate bills. Again in January 1983 we introduced a common bill, cosponsored by several of our colleagues.

We intend to reintroduce our bill again in the 99th Congress, but have decided to wait until the rules Committee and the Senate have acted on the select committee's proposal for a special committee to be established. The 2-year budget bill has previously been referred jointly to the three Senate committees having jurisdiction over the subject matter. These are the Budget, Governmental Affairs, and Rules Committees.

By establishing a special committee with legislative power to report on this subject, we can avoid the necessity of triple referrals and the synchronization of the actions of three separate committees.

In the meantime, it is my hope that Senator QUAYLE and I will soon send a copy of our proposed bill to each of our colleagues urging cosponsorship of the bill with us.

The select committee, like the Pearson-Ribicoff study before it, has done excellent work, and made some realistic proposals. We have a chance not only to address the problems of Senate operations but to do something constructive to overcome them. I pledge my efforts to this task and look forward to early consideration in the Rules Committee of the recommendations of the select committee, of Pearson-Ribicoff, and, of individual Senators.

SEC. 15. Rule XVII, paragraph 5, of the Standing Rules of the Senate is amended to read as follows:

The motion shall be privileged and shall be decided after one hour of debate, without any intervening action, to be equally divided and controlled by the Majority Leader and the Minority Leader or their designees.

"(b) If a motion made under subparagraph (a) is agreed to by an affirmative vote of three-fifths of the Senators present and voting, then any floor amendment not already agreed to (except amendments proposed by the Committee which reported the bill or resolution) which is not germane or relevant to the subject matter of the bill or resolution, or the subject matter of an amendment proposed by the committee which reported the bill or resolution, shall not be in order.

"(c) When a motion made under subparagraph (a) has been agreed to as provided in subparagraph (b) with respect to a bill or resolution, points of order with respect to questions of germaneness or relevancy of amendments shall be decided without debate, except that the Presiding Officer may entertain debate for his own guidance prior to ruling on the point of order. Appeals from the decision of the Presiding Officer on such points of order shall be decided without debate.

"(d) Whenever an appeal is taken from a decision of the Presiding Officer on the question of germaneness of an amendment, or whenever the Presiding Officer submits the question of germaneness or relevancy of an amendment to the Senate, the vote necessary to overturn the decision of the Presiding Officer or hold the amendment germane or relevant shall be two-thirds of the Senators present and voting. No amendment proposing sense of the Senate or sense of the Congress language that does not directly relate to the measure or matter before the Senate shall be considered germane.

SEC. 17. Paragraph 2 of Rule XXII of the Standing Rules of the Senate is amended to read as follows:

"2. Notwithstanding the provisions of rule II or rule IV or any other rule of the Senate, at any time a motion signed by sixteen Senators, to bring to a close the debate upon any measure, motion, other matter pending before the Senate, or the unfinished business, is presented to the Senate, the Presiding Officer, or clerk at the direction of the Presiding Officer, shall at once state the motion to the Senate, and one hour after the Senate meets on the following calendar day but one, he shall lay the motion before the Senate and direct that the clerk call the roll, and upon the ascertainment that a quorum is present, the Presiding Officer shall, without debate, submit to the Senate by a yea-and-nay vote the question.

'Is it the sense of the Senate that the debate shall be brought to a close?'

And if that question shall be decided in the affirmative by two-thirds of the Senators present and voting except on a measure or motion to amend the Senate rules, in which case the necessary affirmative vote shall be two-thirds of the Senators duly chosen and sworn then said measure, motion, or other matter pending before the Senate, or the unfinished business, shall be the unfinished business to the exclusion of all other business until disposed of.

"Except by unanimous consent, no amendment shall be proposed after the vote to bring the debate to a close, unless it had been submitted in writing to the Journal Clerk by 1 o'clock p.m. on the day following the filing of the cloture motion if an amendment in the first degree or a complete substitute and unless it had been so submitted at least one hour prior to the beginning of the cloture vote if an amendment in the second degree. No dilatory motion, or dilatory amendment, or amendment not germane shall be in order. Points of order, including questions of relevancy, and appeals from the decision of the Presiding Officer, shall be decided without debate. Whenever an appeal is taken under this rule from a decision of the Presiding Officer on the question of germaneness of an amendment, the vote necessary to overturn the decision of the Presiding Officer shall be two-thirds of the Senators present and voting.

"After no more than twenty hours of consideration of the measure, motion, or other matter on which cloture has been invoked, the time to be equally divided and controlled by the majority leader and minority leader, or their designees, the Senate shall proceed, without any further debate on any question, to vote on the final disposition thereof to the exclusion of all amendments not then actually pending before the Senate at that time and to the exclusion of all motions, except a motion to table, or to reconsider and one quorum call on demand to establish the presence of a quorum (and motions required to establish a quorum) immediately before the final vote begins.

"If, for any reason, a measure or matter is reprinted after cloture has been invoked, amendments which were in order prior to the reprinting of the measure or matter will continue to be in order and may be conformed and reprinted at the request of the amendment's sponsor. The conforming changes must be limited to lineation and pagination.

"No Senator shall call up more than two amendments until every other Senator shall have had the opportunity to do likewise.

"After cloture is invoked, the reading of any amendment, including House amendments, shall be dispensed, with.".

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, during the last Congress, I introduced a series of changes to the Standing Rules of the Senate. This action was done with the purpose of urging the Senate to consider a rules reform which would preserve essential minority and individual rights but which allow the Senate to function. As I said in the last Congress when these rules changes were introduced, "efficiency is not the Senate's constitutional purpose . . . but neither is legislative paralysis."

During the 99th Congress, it is my hope that the Senate will examine these proposed changes to the Standing Rules of the Senate. In addition, the work of the Quayle committee should not be left untouched. There were many ideas suggested that should be carefully considered including the Senate workload as well as the budget, authorization, and appropriations processes. In any event, the Standing Rules of the Senate should be reviewed and given close scrutiny.

Once again, I submit for the consideration of the Senate, a series of rules changes.

MOTION TO PROCEED

Mr. President, in most cases, a motion to consider a legislative item is debatable. The right to debate this motion has frequently been subject to actual or threatened abuse. It has led to the problem of a double filibuster—where extended debate can take place not only on the measure itself, but also on the question of timeliness of consideration.

This is bad policy. It is also anomalous. Motions to proceed to privileged matters are nondebatable. So are motions to proceed made in the morning hour. So are motions to proceed to matters on the Executive Calendar. No logical reason exists to bar debate on the motion to proceed in these instances but permit unlimited debate in others.

I suggest a change which allows some debate on the motion to proceed without opening it to the possibility of filibuster. For such motions made in legislative session and outside the morning hour, this suggestion would limit debate to 2 hours, equally divided. Further, it would permit a tabling motion within the 2-hour period. This would avoid turning the 2-hour grant of time into a new filibuster tactic on other bills.

This change preserves to a lesser degree the anomaly I earlier discussed. I had considered proposing the motion as nondebatable in all instances, but decided to take a less radical approach of suggesting limited debate on the question of consideration.

CONFERENCE REPORTS

Requiring the Senate to hear the reading of a conference report is literally the kiss of death for legislation particularly at the end of a Congress. The only way at present to dispense with the reading of a conference report, if demanded by one Senator, is by unanimous consent.

Another proposal submitted today is that the reading of a conference report is deemed waived if the conference report is available to Members in printed form for at least 24 hours.

The purpose of this change is to allow Members time to review work products, but to close the parliamentary loophole whereby a single Senator may kill a bill simply by objecting to a unanimous-consent request to waive the reading of a voluminous conference report to the entire Senate in the last hours of the Senate's session.

TREATIES

Rule XXX relates to executive session and the proceedings with respect to treaties. The so-called "Committee of the Whole" procedure is a parliamentary hula hoop that should be purged from the Senate rules on executive session as it was from legislative session over 50 years ago.

Recommendations have been made in the past to rid the Senate of this procedure requiring the Senate to resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering treaties. This procedure is clearly an anachronism and serves no purpose other than to complicate the treaty procedure.

My proposal is to eliminate the Committee of the Whole requirement and to consider a treaty in executive session in a straightforward fashion with respect to amendments and adoption of amendments by the full Senate. This procedure is consistent with the way amendments are considered and adopted during legislative session.

PASTORE RULE (GERMANENESS OR DEBATE)

Rule XIX, paragraph 1(b), addresses germaneness of debate. The present rule, known as the Pastore rule, requires that the first 3 hours of debate on the pending or unfinished business be germane. The Senate should refine and extend that concept.

My proposal is that the germaneness of debate requirement on the pending or unfinished business apply throughout the day.

The purpose of this change is to encourage Senators to stick with the issue or issues before the body. In recent years, much of the time invested by the Senate has been on debating issues unrelated to the matter at hand. This practice has prevented the Senate from giving its full attention to the pending business. The change proposed would direct the Senate's attention in a more appropriate and fruitful manner.

SENSE OF THE SENATE/CONGRESS AMENDMENTS

The most overused legislative vehicle in the legislative process is the proliferation of the so-called sense of the Senate or the sense of the Congress amendments. While such amendments periodically serve a useful purpose, by and large the rhetoric generated does not justify the time invested by the Senate. Since these amendments are merely hortatory, they are deemed per se germane and have been used in many instances to get around germaneness requirements. In other words, since sense of the Senate/Congress amendments do not have the force of law, the Senate has tolerated their consideration. This practice should be changed.

My proposal would require that such amendments meet the same germaneness standard as would be required for language having the force of law.

The purpose is clear. It would encourage Senators to offer germane amendments to bills before the Senate and save debate on other issues until the proper time. This is a rules change that will reduce the time spent upon issues unrelated to measures before the Senate.

RESOLUTION OVER UNDER THE RULE

Rule XIV, paragraph 6, states that if a unanimous-consent request is made for immediate consideration of a resolution, and objection is heard, the resolution be placed in a section of the Legislative Calendar reserved for "resolutions over under the rule." There it sits until the Senate reaches it as the last item in the litany of morning business in the morning hour following adjournment.

This convoluted procedure may have made sense when the Senate frequently adjourned from day to day. It is virtually useless in an era when the Senate usually recesses at the close of business. Indeed, resolutions placed on this posture are condemned to a form of legislative purgatory.

I propose that if objection is heard to the immediate consideration of a resolution, such be held at the desk for placement on the Calendar of General Orders on the next legislative day.

GERMANENESS OF AMENDMENTS

At present, germaneness of amendments is required under four conditions; under cloture, on general appropriations bills, under certain rulemaking statutes, and under most time agreements.

The next proposal would make it possible to set a germaneness requirement without imposing the extraneous parliamentary baggage of cloture of overcoming the often insurmountable problems of securing a time agreement.

Instead, Mr. President, this suggestion would permit a motion to impose a germaneness requirement. The motion could be offered once per day per measure, and would necessitate an affirmative vote of three-fifths of Senators present and voting. Under this procedure, committee amendments from the committee of jurisdiction would be deemed per se germane. Appeals as to germaneness would be decided without debate. Finally, this procedure is not intended to supersede germaneness requirements already in the Senate rules or in rulemaking statutes.

Especially in this area, Mr. President, we should recognize the pioneering work of the distinguished minority leader. This particular proposal is one which he has advanced for years. I think it has a lot of merit and so am incorporating it in the suggestions I am setting forth today.

GERMANENESS OF AMENDMENTS ON APPROPRIATIONS BILLS

Under rule XVI, which deals with general appropriations bills, the Chair is required to refer questions of germaneness for determination by the Senate without debate.

This is a procedure which the Senate has just gone through and these past days we now know the direction in which it leads.

The procedure is an anachronism. In all other cases, the Chair rules on germaneness questions. Indeed, under cloture, the Chair rules without a point of order coming from the floor.

Even on appropriations bills, this rule is hollow. Under a 1979 precedent, if germaneness is raised as a defense to a point of order that an amendment is legislation, the Chair imposes a threshold test. If the underlying House bill contains no legislative language pertinent to the subject of the amendment the Chair will not refer the question to the Senate. However, sensible this precedent may be, it directly contravenes the edict of rule XVI, and emphasizes the need for reform in this area.

The proposal, I submit, would amend rule XVI to enable the Chair to rule on questions of germaneness and would require that appeals of such rulings be decided without debate.

POSTCLOTURE CHANGES

Now, Mr. President, let me discuss the question of postcloture consideration. In 1979, a 100-hour, all-inclusive cap was placed on postcloture activities. Everything counts against the cap, including debate, votes and quorum calls. With limited exceptions, each Member can use only 1 hour to debate postcloture.

One hundred hours is a long time, and the threat of substantial postcloture filibusters can negate the very purpose of cloture, particularly near the end of a session.

My proposal would enable Senators to reduce the time available after cloture by yielding debate time back to the Chair. At present, Senators cannot accomplish this.

This procedure affords the Senate great flexibility. If postcloture discussion is robust and widespread, debate time will be consumed rather than handed back. On the other hand, if the discussion amounts to a narrowly based filibuster, Senators may wish to use this mechanism to lessen the time available.

In other to protect all Senators' rights, this proposal allows the reductions of time achieved through this procedure but will not cause time remaining under cloture to be less than 2 hours.

What it would do is prevent other Senators from using my time or your time, Mr. President. If we wish to really limit time, Senators could yield that time back and it could not be used through dilatory procedures adopted in a filibuster that had very, very little support.

Further on the subject of cloture, Mr. President, I suggest committee amendments from the committee of jurisdiction be deemed per se germane. This is not presently the base, and forces the filing of multiple cloture motions so that committee amendments do not fail the germaneness requirements of rule XXII, precisely the parliamentary situation we are in this very day.

Under unanimous-consent agreements, amendments from the committee of jurisdiction are per se germane. Treating such committee amendments differently under cloture wastes a lot of the Senate's time and makes no sense.

FILING AMENDMENTS UNDER CLOTURE

Another revision with respect to rule XXII should be made with respect to the filing of amendments under cloture. Currently, the procedure under cloture requires first-degree amendments to be filed not later than 1 p.m. on the day following cloture. Theoretically, there may be three amendments in the nature of a substitute filed to a bill but technically only one may be offered and offered first. Therefore, there needs to be some accommodation made whereby the first-degree amendment to the substitute may be filed to the amendment in the nature of a substitute.

My proposal would be to create a filing deadline for first-degree amendments in the nature of a substitute. The following hypothetical timetable is offered:

On Monday, a cloture motion would be filed. Tuesday, 1 p.m., would be the deadline for first-degree amendments. A complete substitute filed at this time would be considered as original text if it were the first complete substitute called up.

Tuesday, 6 p.m., would be the deadline for first-degree amendments to a complete substitute filed earlier.

Finally, on Wednesday, second-degree amendments would have to be filed no later than 1 hour before the cloture vote.

This change is designed to allow first-degree amendments to be drafted to amendments in the nature of a substitute. The first complete substitute offered is treated as original text. At present, the filing requirements of rule XXII make it difficult to get amendments qualified to a substitute filed after the cloture motion is filed. This proposal suggests an adjustment to make such amendments in order.

TIME LIMITATION CALENDAR

Time and again, the Senate has encountered bills which enjoy widespread support but which cannot be moved because of the opposition of a determined few. The theoretical remedy of cloture is often ineffective to meet this situation. Cloture is cumbersome. A vote on cloture cannot occur until the second day after the cloture motion is filed. Then, if cloture is invoked, the Senate must remain on the measure until its disposition. While I think this burdensome procedure is wholly appropriate for major, controversial legislation, many bills never receive consideration because the Senate lacks time to apply the cloture procedure to them.

A new method is needed to secure action on bills which have overwhelming support but which the Senate cannot reach because a few Senators choose to object.

I propose creation of a new Time Limitation Calendar section [TLC] in the Legislative Calendar. In this section would be placed measures on which a notice had been filed in the RECORD. Placement in the Time Limitation Calendar section would not remove these measures from their position on the Calendar of General Orders, but would make them eligible for special treatment under the new procedure.

I envision that 4 days' notice would be given of an intent to proceed to a measure under the Time Limitation Calendar procedure. During the intervening period, filing deadlines would be established for amendments. During the first hour of session on Wednesdays and Thursdays, after the prayer, leader time, and any special orders following immediately thereon, a nondebatable motion could be made to move to the measure under notice. Agreement to the motion would require an affirmative vote of three-fourths of all Senators present and voting.

If the motion were agreed to, a time limitation with respect to amendments, debatable motions, points of order or appeals would be placed on consideration of the measure. Final passage would require a simple majority vote.

Should the Senate invoke the time limitation on amendments, and should consideration reach or extend beyond 8 hours, it would be in order to move for an overall time cap of 6 additional hours. Agreement to the motion would require three-fourths of all Senators present and voting.

If no Time Limitation Calendar motion is made within 10 days of session following the notice then the notice shall expire. However, I suggest the notice may thereafter be renewed as it may if the Time Limitation Calendar notice is made and fails.

As to the time limitations, Mr. President, I suggest they be fairly tight. Our purpose is to establish a mechanism by which legislation can move, not to create an avenue for filibuster. Accordingly, I recommend a time limitation on amendments, motions, submitted points of order, or appeals. Because of the filing requirement, reading of amendments would be deemed waived. Germaneness of amendments would be required. Similar to postcloture, no Senator could offer more than one amendment unless any other Senator had the opportunity to do likewise. The procedure creating an overall time limitation on the bill is designed to provide a significantly high standard so it is not easily achieved. Yet, should the overwhelming majority of the Senate support passage of a bill, this suggestion provides a way to act on the issue. Again, I point out that this would be for issues of less than national import.

Mr. President, this proposal suggests a way for the Senate to get about its business without impending legitimate individual rights. A substantial notice procedure is built in to avoid surprises. A heavy supermajority vote is required before the time limitation or related restrictions are triggered. This idea strikes an appropriate balance between individual prerogatives and institutional needs. As I have suggested, that is a balance currently in major need of redress.

Mr. President, I have proposed a number of changes to the Senate rules. Many of the changes, in fact most, are not glamorous or radical. These proposals are designed to rid the present rules of the Senate of anachronisms and archaic practices. The intent of these suggestions is to propose a way to focus the Senate's debate on issues and to eliminate much of the parliamentary quagmire that has prevented this body from making the progress it is capable of making. Many of us feel strongly about the traditions, practices, and precedents of the Senate. They are a part of the Senate's rich history and the foundation of the future of the legislative process in this country. But, the Senate can be improved. Today, in the Senate, we have what our predecessors did not have. We have the experience of history and the lessons of the past. Therefore, we should face change with an open mind and we should have the confidence in the institution to make the parameters in which we operate fair, just, and workable.

In recent years, some of us have been disturbed by the way that loopholes have been found in the Senate rules. If the Senate is to continue as the greatest deliberative body in the world, we must be serious in restoring our Chamber in a way in which meaningful and substantive debate may take place.

I urge my colleagues to review the suggestions made here. I look forward this year to examining suggested revisions—on a bipartisan basis.

SENATE RESOLUTION 33—AMENDING THE SENATE RULES RELATING TO STATEMENTS OF CONSTITUTIONAL AUTHORITY

Mr. HATCH submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration.

S. RES. 33

Resolved, That rule 14 of the Standing Rules of the Senate be amended by adding at the end thereof the following new clause:

"11. The Senate shall neither receive nor consider any bill or resolution unless it contains a statement citing, as precisely as possible, the article, section, paragraph, and clause, or amendment, of the Constitution of the United States which is the basis of authority for the bill or resolution. Statements which cite language contained in the final paragraph of article 1, section 8 of the Constitution of the United States shall further specify that language conferring the "powers" to which such paragraph refers."

SENATE RESOLUTION 34—RELATING TO THE SOVIET OCCUPATION OF AFGHANISTAN

Mr. D'AMATO submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration.

S. RES. 34

Condemning the government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics for five years of forced and oppressive military occupation of Afghanistan in the face of popular resistance to Soviet imperialism

Whereas it has been five years since the Soviet Union invaded the nation of Afghanistan to establish a puppet government in Kabul,

Whereas the Soviet Government has implemented a draconian policy of terror on the Afghan peoples,

Whereas there is strong evidence that deadly chemical and toxic weapons have been used against Afghanistan,

Whereas severe food shortages are being induced by the Soviet Union, similar to methods used by the Soviet Government in the Ukrainian Famine of 1932 through 1933,

Whereas most hospitals and medical care facilities have been destroyed by the Soviet armies,

Whereas over three million freedom-seeking Afghans have fled to Pakistan,

Whereas the Soviet Union has repeatedly crossed the border of Pakistan to attack these refugee camps,

Whereas over five hundred thousand Afghans have been brutally killed as a result of this invasion, and

Whereas the Mujahidin, the Freedom Fighters, which enjoy wide support from the Afghans, have frustrated and valiantly fought the Soviet armies: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate of the United States of America—

(1) condemns the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics for five years of military terrorism and the attempted destruction of Afghanistan; and

(2) strongly recommends that the President provide needed medical, military, and food assistance to the Afghan Freedom Fighters.

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, in December 1979, the U.S.S.R. invaded Afghanistan. Five years ago this past December, the Soviet Union descended upon Kabul with the intention of quickly subjugating this small, but strategically located, nation. Instead, massive popular resistance and a viable force of freedom fighters has made the mighty Soviet military endure a state of war longer than their involvement in World War II.

Over 500,000 citizens of Afghanistan have perished as a result of the war. Over 3 million people have fled into neighboring Pakistan as refugees. This is one-fourth of the prewar population of Afghanistan. The Soviet military regularly bombs the 300 refugee camps in Pakistan. Seemingly on an annual basis, Soviet forces begin a new and more ruthless aerial bombing campaign against defenseless Afghan villages. It is established fact that chemical weapons have been extensively used in at least 15 provinces of Afghanistan, directly causing up to 3,000 deaths. The Soviet military relies on a scorched earth policy to destroy crops that could feed the freedom fighters. This policy is causing a famine in this mostly agricultural nation that I fear will rival the Soviet induced Ukrainian famine in the early 1930's that killed millions. Finally, the Soviet military is destroying medical facilities, causing a serious health problem. These policies will lead to a death toll in the millions if not stopped soon.

The 5-year-old war is destroying the infrastructure of Afghanistan. Half of the nation's schools and three-quarters of its communication lines have been destroyed. Afghanistan is heading toward complete ruin.

The Afghan invasion is further evidence that the Soviet Union has a detailed plan for global expansion. Their plans have been indefinitely delayed, however, through the courageous resistance of the Afghans. Regardless of Soviet brutality, the Afghan freedom fighters, the Mujahidin, have prevented Soviet control of most of the nation. In fact, the Soviet Union can undisputedly claim only 10 percent of Afghanistan. For this 10 percent, however, the U.S.S.R. pays dearly. As many as 115,000 troops are stationed in Afghanistan, costing over $6 billion a year. Some estimates report that there have been over 20,000 Soviet casualties.

Regardless of the discouraging statistics, the Soviets persist in this effort because of the incentives to stay. The major advantages include: Soviet military presence in Afghanistan is destabilizing for the region; the Soviet army has a testing ground for its troops and its weapons; and, most importantly, it is ever closer to its most desired goal, a warm water port.

The Afghan-Soviet war is not the front page news it once was, although it should be. Atrocities by the Soviet Union are unparalleled since the Second World War. It is important that, as a leader of the free world, the United States never cease its outrage over Soviet contempt for international laws, national sovereignty, and human rights. I urge my colleagues to cosponsor this resolution to show our strong support for the freedom fighters and our disdain for 5 years of barbarity in Afghanistan.

I ask unanimous consent that a copy of my resolution be printed in the RECORD in its entirety at the conclusion of my remarks.

Thank you, Mr. President.

SENATE RESOLUTION 35—RELATING TO RESTRICTIONS ON HOME SATELLITE ANTENNAS

Mr. GOLDWATER submitted the following resolution which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

S. RES. 35

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that, consistent with the policy of the United States to promote the free flow of information guaranteed by the First Amendment and to encourage the development and provision of new communications technologies and services in the public interest, the Federal Communications Commission should affirm that state and local regulatory authority, including, but not limited to, zoning, public safety or health authority and authority to grant a franchise, license or permit, must be exercised so that it does not:

(1) discriminate unreasonably among home satellite reception antennas and other types of home communications reception antennas,

(2) have the effect of prohibiting or frustrating the reception of satellite transmitted programming by members of the public, except as may be necessary to carrying out a clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed compelling governmental interest, or

(3) intentionally or incidentally restrict any particular means of delivering or receiving satellite transmitted programming in order to protect from competition or to provide a competitive advantage to any other means of delivering or receiving such programming.

SENATE RESOLUTION 36—RELATING TO RESTRICTIONS ON AMATEUR RADIO ANTENNAS

Mr. GOLDWATER submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

S. RES. 36

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that, consistent with the policy of the United States to recognize and enhance the value of the Amateur Radio Service as a voluntary noncommercial communication service which provides public service and emerency communications, the Federal Communications Commission should affirm that state and local regulatory authority, including, but not limited to, zoning, public safety or health authority, and authority to grant a license or permit, must be exercised so that it does not:

(1) discriminate unreasonably among amateur radio antennas and other types of home communications transmission and/or reception antennas, or

(2) have the effect of prohibiting or frustrating the transmission or reception of amateur radio communications by Federally-licensed amateur radio stations, except as may be necessary to carrying out a clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed compelling governmental interest related to the health and safety of the community.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, I am today submitting two resolutions relative to discriminatory and unreasonable local restrictions on home satellite antennas and amateur radio antennas. These antennas are used for different purposes, but both types are encountering a heavy rash of unduly restrictive local ordinances and other regulations that directly conflict with national communications policy and the first amendment interest in the widest possible availability of information of all kinds. Often these local rules do not serve any legitimate interest, certainly not a compelling interest, but are blatantly discriminatory or anticompetitive.

The first resolution addresses the problem of arbitrary local restrictions which effectively prohibit the installation of home satellite dish antennas. The Cable Communications Policy Act of 1984 added a new section 705 to the Communications Act establishing a clear statutory right of dealers to sell home satellite dish antennas and of consumers to use them for private viewing of unscrambled signals.

With the legality issue essentially being answered, the dish industry and consumer is still not out of the woods. Arbitrary local zoning restrictions and onerous license fees might still bring this technology to a halt.

Therefore, I am introducing a resolution calling upon the FCC to announce that State and local regulatory authority, including zoning, public safety or health authority and authority to grant a franchise, license or permit, must not be exercised to suppress the home Earth station industry.

Specifically, the resolution states that local governments should not discriminate unreasonably among satellite dish antennas and other types of antennas. For example, I have in mind an ordinance that allows the installation of 30 foot tall towers with stacked bays of over the air antennas but at the same time bans home Earth stations with an 8 or 10 foot dish.

The resolution also provides that ordinances and licensing authority shall not be used to prohibit or unduly restrict satellite dishes, except only when it is necessary—and I emphasize necessary—to carrying out a specifically identified compelling governmental interest. Compelling means that the burden is on the local government to prove that no less restrictive means will protect the government's interest. It is the highest constitutional standard that the courts use in scrutinizing a statute of local, State, or Federal governments.

For example, a narrowly drawn and nondiscriminatory ordinance protecting the appearance of a historic zone would serve a compelling interest. But a $50 franchise fee to install a dish antenna would not meet the exacting standard of the compelling State interest test.

Third, the resolution will state that local authority should not be used intentionally or incidentally to restrict one means of delivering or receiving satellite programming in order to give a competitive advantage to some other means of delivering or receiving that programming. This provision would meet the challenge being presented by some cable companies who are trying to insulate themselves from competition by hiding behind local restrictions on Earth stations.

As a Senator from a rural State where the counties are larger than many Eastern States, I have always supported cable television as a competitive medium. But cable does not have a problem with the satellite dish industry. Cable's problem has been with counties and cities who imposed excessive service and ratemaking demands. Hopefully, the new law, S. 66, will solve this problem by setting guidelines for the exercise of State and local regulatory authority over cable systems. Now it is the dish industry's turn. It, too, should enjoy growth unhampered by unnecessary regulation.

And, as a political conservative, I believe that each State possesses broad authority and responsibility over a wide range of subjects. However, the basic question here is not Federal preemption of local powers. It is whether cities and counties can thwart a clear national policy which has been repeatedly enunciated by the Congress and the FCC to encourage the development of new communications technologies and services in the public interest.

Mr. President, I am aware that United Satellite Communications and SPACE, the Society for Private and Commercial Earth Stations, have each filed petitions for declaratory rulings by the Federal Communications Commission on the subject. The resolution is compatible with the positions these petitioners have taken. However, I believe the subject is also of close interest in Congress which, after all, is primarily responsible for setting national communications policy.

The second resolution relates to amateur radio antennas. It would urge the FCC to protect its amateur radio licensees against unreasonably restrictive land use and other State and local regulation which would render the communications from such stations impossible or unreliable. Specifically, the Commission is being asked to exercise its Federal preemptive authority by affirming that States and local regulatory authority must be exercised so as to avoid prohibiting or frustrating the transmission or reception of signals by federally-licensed amateur radio stations. The exception to that policy would be in cases in which such local regulation is necessary to carry out a clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed compelling governmental interest related to the health and safety of the community.

Amateur radio stations, which are operated in licensees' residences, are licensed by the Federal Communications Commission to provide public service and emergency communications for the benefit of citizens of the communities in which they are located. Amateurs have proven their value on countless occasions as a result of their technical ability to put together radio stations of extremely high efficiency and reliability. Local civil defense and municipal emergency offices routinely utilize cadres of amateurs to provide communications in local and wide-area emergencies. If municipal governments had to provide the level of services provided free of charge by amateurs, the cost would be prohibitive.

Yet, even though municipalities rely on amateur radio operators for public service and emergency communications, the amateurs' stations are often rendered useless or unreliable by virtue of overly restrictive municipal antenna ordinances and other land use regulations. These unreasonable restrictions are often established without any technical understanding of the impact on Commission licensees at all. It is seldom that a municipal restriction on amateur radio antennas bears any trace of a basis in safety or health concerns. Certainly such concerns are necessarily within the jurisdication of municipalities as an exercise of the police power. An antenna restriction which goes beyond those concerns, and which precludes an amateur radio licensee from performing his or her public service function, places the amateur in an adversarial posture with respect to the very community that amateur seeks to serve with public service and emergency communications.

I have reviewed a number of cases in which amateurs have challenged a municipal zoning restriction which makes it impossible for an amateur to communicate. In these cases, amateurs have expended personal funds, which can never be recouped, in order to defend their ability to operate these radio stations in their homes. Those who cannot afford to pursue legal remedies to challenge an unreasonable ordinance, to pay the often expensive filing fees for variance applications, or those who are physically handicapped and cannot physically defend their communications ability must operate with ineffective antennas or not at all.

The Commission has never stated any intent to preempt local ordinances which prohibit or frustrate amateur radio communications. As a result, courts have found that although amateur radio is a reasonable and normal accessory use to residential real property, it does not matter how severely a municipal regulation may restrict amateur communications because the Federal Communications Commission has not exercised Federal preemption over local antenna regulation. Skinner v. Zoning Board of Adjustment, 193 A.2d 861 (N.J. Super., App. Div. 1963); Schroeder v. Municipal Court of Los Cerritos Judicial District, 141 Cal. Rptr. 85, 73 Cal. App. 3d 841 (1977).

It is appropriate and timely for the Federal Communications Commission to delineate the limit of local jurisdiction over antenna regulation, which is reached when the local law stands as an obstacle to the full purposes and objectives of Congress. Hines v. Davidowitz, 312 U.S. 52, 67 (194); Capital Cities Cable, Inc. v. Crisp, 104 S.Ct. 2694 (1984).

Recognizing that judicial relief from unreasonable local restrictions on antennas will not be forthcoming absent a Federal statement of preemptive authority, the amateur radio community has recently requested that the Commission issue a declaratory ruling to that effect. Organizations such as the American Red Cross, which rely on amateur radio operators routinely, have supported this effort. Over 900 favorable comments have been received to date. The purpose of this resolution is to urge the Commission to insure that the Federal interest in effective reliable licensed amateur radio station operation is not impeded by unreasonable local regulation of amateur antenna systems, which regulations are not necessary to a clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed compelling governmental interest related to the health and safety of the community.

This balancing of the local police power interest in protection of citizens and the Federal interest in unencumbered interstate and international amateur radio communications will result in more thought and planning invested in municipal antenna regulation so that the needs of amateurs are taken into account. As to existing regulations, the Commission action urged by this resolution will permit amateurs to raise Federal preemption in their own behalf and to establish as a matter of technical fact the degree of impairment of communications from an existing antenna regulation.

Because of the widespread nature of overly restrictive local antenna regulations which disable such a vital public and emergency communications service, it is expected that the Federal Communications Commission will grant administrative relief in accordance with this resolution. If that is not the case, it may be desirable to consider mandatory legislation on the subject.

SENATE RESOLUTION 37—RELATING TO SMALL BUSINESS AND AGRICULTURE REPRESENTATIVES ON THE FEDERAL RESERVE BOARD

Mr. PRYOR submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs.

S. RES. 37

Whereas small business, by Small Business Administration standards of measurement, accounts for 98 percent of all U.S. businesses, and

Whereas 60 percent of all new jobs are created by firms with 500 or fewer employees, and

Whereas small business bankruptcies in 1982 totalled nearly 66,000 due in large part to high interest rates, and many other firms closed down without filing for bankruptcy, and

Whereas our agricultural industry, including three million American farmers, is heavily dependent upon credit, and

Whereas neither of these sectors had direct representation on the Federal Reserve Board, which establishes our national monetary policy, and

Whereas the growth of our national economy depends on the health of the small business and agricultural sectors: Now therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that the President should ensure that the small business and agricultural sectors of our economy are represented on the Federal Reserve Board of Governors by a person of demonstrable experience in small business or agricultural matters.

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, today I'm submitting a resolution that provides the sense of the Senate that small business and agriculture should be adequately represented on the Federal Reserve Board of Governors. I introduced a similar measure in the 98th Congress.

Mr. President, this is not a new concept, and other Senators have proposed this in the past, in recognition of the fact that the monetary policy decisions of the Federal Reserve Board play a critical role in our economy, and affect the lives of small businessmen and farmers. Both of these sectors of our economy are very important, and very credit sensitive.

Small businesses create most of the jobs, and are extremely productive, yet they are constantly hammered by increases in interest rates. Likewise, agriculture is extremely credit sensitive. This industry, which is of major importance in the State of Arkansas, accounts for over 20 percent of this Nation's gross national product. Yet, our farmers are going out of business at record rates due to low commodity prices and the high cost of borrowing money.

Both of these sectors of our economy would benefit from some representation on the Federal Reserve Board, and I think the Board would benefit from the views and comments of someone from "Main Street."

I hope my colleagues will join me in this effort, Mr. President. We can take action here in the Congress to cut spending and reduce the deficit, but the voices of our farmers and small business people need to be heard when the Federal Reserve Board is considering monetary policy.

SENATE RESOLUTION 38—COMMEMORATING THE 50TH ANNIVERSARY OF FOREIGN TRADE ZONE NO. 1

Mr. D'AMATO submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

S. RES. 38

Whereas foreign trade zones have demonstrably contributed to the economic well-being of the United States;

Whereas the first foreign trade zone was established in New York City in 1934 and has just celebrated its fiftieth anniversary;

Whereas the success of Foreign Trade Zone Numbered 1 is directly attributable to the hard work of the employees thereof; and

Whereas over one hundred foreign trade zones have now been established because of the great success enjoyed by Foreign Trade Zone Numbered 1: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate of the United States that the employees, past and present, of Foreign Trade Zone Numbered 1 be commended for their activities and accomplishments;

And, that we should rightfully commemorate their accomplishments;

And, further, that it is the sense of the Senate of the United States and these sentiments be transmitted to the employees of Foreign Trade Zone Numbered 1 in the appropriate manner.

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce a resolution commending all the workers and companies who have made the foreign trade zone concept a great success. In particular, I want to draw attention to the recently celebrated 50th anniversary of America's first foreign trade zone, Foreign Trade Zone No. 1 in Brooklyn, NY.

Over these 50 years, thousands of jobs and millions of dollars of economic activity have been generated in the United States by this worthwhile program. Foreign trade zones have kept American businesses competitive that might otherwise have been forced to close under the pressure of foreign imports. I believe Congress should recognize the important role by foreign trade zones and should commend all those who have worked so hard for their success.

Foreign Trade Zone No. 1 has stood as a shining example for all the trade zones and subzones that have followed it. This is primarily due to the hard work and great pride of both the workers and the managers there. I believe these efforts deserve the recognition of the Congress.

"(b)(1)(A) In the case of the 14 contaminants listed in the Advance Notice of Proposed Rulemaking published in volume 47, Federal Register, page 9352, not later than 15 months after the date of enactment of the Safe Drinking Water Act Amendments of 1985, the Administrator shall—

"(i) simultaneously propose a maximum contaminant level goal and a national primary drinking water regulation, and after opportunity for public comment, simultaneously publish a maximum contaminant level goal and a national primary drinking water regulation for those contaminants for which there is a rational basis to believe that there may be any adverse effect on the health of persons; or

"(ii) publish in the Federal Register a determination that there is not sufficient evidence to constitute a rational basis to believe that the contaminant may have any adverse effect on the health of persons.

"(B) In the case of each of the contaminants listed in the Advance Notice of Proposed Rulemaking published in volume 48, Federal Register, page 45502, not later than 36 months after the date of enactment of the Safe Drinking Water Act Amendments of 1984, the Administrator shall—

DURENBERGER AMENDMENTS NOS. 5 AND 6

Mr. DURENBERGER submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 124), supra; as follows:

AMENDMENT NO. 5

Section 1448(a) of the Safe Drinking Water Act is amended to read as follows:

"JUDICIAL REVIEW"

"(A) action of the Administrator in promulgating any national primary drinking water regulation under section 1412, any regulation under section 1413(b), any regulation under section 1414(c), any regulation for State underground injection control programs under section 1421, or any general regulation for the administration of this title may be filed in the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit, or in any United States court of appeals for a circuit in which the petitioner resides or transacts business; and

"(B) action of the Administrator in promulgating any other regulation under this title, issuing any order under this title, or making any determination under this title may be filed only in the United States court of appeals for any appropriate circuit. Any such petition shall be filed within the 120-day period beginning on the date of the promulgation of the regulation or issuance of the order with respect to which review is sought or on the date of the termination with respect to which review is sought, and may be filed after the expiration of such 120-day period if the petition is based solely on grounds arising after the expiration of such period. Action of the Administrator with respect to which review could have been obtained under this subsection shall not be subject to judicial review in any civil or criminal proceeding for enforcement or in any civil action to enjoin enforcement.

"2(A) If petitions for review of the same agency action have been filed in two or more courts of appeals and the Administrator has received written notice of the filing of the first such petition more than 30 days before receiving written notice of the filing of the second petition, then the record shall be filed in that court in which the first petition was filed. If petitions for review of the same agency action have been filed in two or more courts of appeals and the Administrator has received written notice of the filing of one or more petitions within 30 days or less after receiving written notice of the filing of the first petition, then the Administrator shall promptly advise in writing the Administrative Office of the United States Courts that petitions have been filed in two or more courts of appeals, and shall identify each court for which he has written notice that such petitions have been filed within 30 days or less of receiving written notice of the filing of the first such petition. Pursuant to a system of random selection devised for this purpose, the Administrative Office thereupon shall select the court in which the record shall be filed from among those identified by the Administrator. Upon notification of such selection, the Administrator shall promptly file the record in such court. For the purpose of review of agency action which has previously been remanded to the Administrator, the record shall be filed in the court of appeals which remanded such action.

"(B) Where petitions have been filed in two or more courts of appeals with respect to the same agency action and the record has been filed in one of such courts pursuant to paragraph (1), the other courts in which such petitions have been filed shall promptly transfer such petitions to the court of appeals in which the record has been filed. Pending selection of a court pursuant to subsection (1), any court in which a petition has been filed may postpone the effective date of the agency action until 15 days after the Administrative Office has selected the court in which the record shall be filed.

"(C) Any court in which a petition with respect to any agency action has been filed, including any court selected pursuant to paragraph (2)(A), may transfer such petition to any other court of appeals for the convenience of the parties or otherwise in the interest of justice".

(b) Section 1448(b) of the Safe Drinking Water Act is amended by deleting "45-day" in both places where it appears and inserting "120-days" in lieu thereof.

AMENDMENT NO. 6

Part C of the Safe Drinking Water Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"BRINE DISPOSAL PROGRAM STUDY"

"SEC. . (a)(1) The Administrator shall conduct a study of the current storage and disposal requirements and practices of brine associated with oil or natural gas exploration, production, or recovery in those States in which oil or natural gas exploration, production, or recovery occurs.

"(2) Such study shall identify, using currently available data, those States in which existing underground drinking supplies are subject to contamination, which may have an adverse effect on human health, by heavy metals or total dissolved solids from the current storage and disposal of brine. The results of such study shall be submitted to the Congress within 9 months of enactment.

"(b)(1) Within 180 days of completion of the study, if such contamination is found, the Administrator shall issue guidelines for making a demonstration that an effective program, including adequate enforcement, is being implemented to protect the public health and environment from adverse effects resulting from the storage and disposal of brine, associated with oil or natural gas exploration, production, and recovery, which is not controlled by an existing underground injection control program.

"(2) The Administrator shall notify those States identified as having a significant contamination problem in subsection (a)(2) at the same time that he issues guidelines under subsection (b)(1).

"(3) Within 12 months of receiving notification, such States shall demonstrate to the Administrator that they are implementing an effective program in accordance with guidelines issued under (b)(1).

"(4) If any State required to demonstrate an effective program under this section, fails to make such a demonstration within the specified time, the Administrator shall, after 90 days for notice and opportunity for comment, promulgate a program for that State to achieve the goals in this section.

"(5) If, after a State's demonstration is approved by the Administrator, he determines that the State has failed to maintain an effective program in accordance with subsection (b)(1), he may exercise the authority of subsection (a) of Section 1422 in the same manner as provided in such subsection.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

TRADE DEFICIT WITH JAPAN

● Mr. RIEGLE. Mr. President, the trade deficit with Japan will be well over $30 billion in 1984—almost twice 1983's record deficit.

Yesterday President Reagan and Prime Minister Nakasone met to discuss trade items between our two countries along with other issues. Reports of that meeting are very disturbing. Not only did the two leaders fail to meaningfully discuss Japan's all-out trade invasion of U.S. markets but the extension of the present auto restraints were not even mentioned. This is very alarming when the figures show that two-thirds of the record 1984 trade deficit with Japan will be in autos and auto products.

This large trade deficit comes at a time when our domestic auto industry must spend another $80 million over the next 5 years to retool and modernize. Imported autos from Japan rob the U.S. industrial base of greatly needed funds and also have kept many auto workers on permanent layoff.

Two weeks ago Senator EAGLETON and I wrote to President Reagan urging him to discuss the trade deficit with Japan at the meeting with Prime Minister Nakasone. Since the President did not discuss this very important problem with the Japanese Prime Minister. I am even more concerned for the future of the industrial base of America. It is my continued hope that the voluntary restraint agreement with Japan will be extended beyond the March 31, 1985, deadline and it is time that President Reagan acted to reduce the shocking imbalance of trade with Japan.

I ask that a copy of the letter sent to President Reagan be printed at this point in the RECORD.

The letter follows:

U.S. SENATE,
Washington, DC, December 20, 1984.

HON. RONALD REAGAN,
The President,
The White House, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: We are pleased that at the beginning of next month you will be meeting with Prime Minister Nakasone. We urge you to take this opportunity to emphasize the importance of extending the restraint on Japanese automobile exports.

The American auto industry is still feeling the effects of the past recession, high interest rates, unexpected changes in consumer preference and an unprecedented flood of imports. Over the last few years the industry has faced up to these problems by cutting costs, improving productivity and investing over $40 billion in retooling and modernization. But employment in the American auto industry is still over a fourth below that of five years ago; and, by all accounts, the industry will have to invest over $80 billion more over the next decade.

The U.S. auto industry still accounts for over 20% of all manufacturing employment. Other key industries, from steel to textiles, and from "high-tech" to mining, are all linked to the auto industry.

Any increase in the number of imports coming to the United States would have a very bad effect on our economy. According to a report in Automotive News, Commerce Department analysts have found that the American industry is still extremely "vulnerable" and "could easily slip back into a new round of plant closings, job lay-offs and losses should sales turn down . . . as some forecasters expect they might." We cannot let the Japanese exploit this situation. Effective restraints on Japanese imports are needed. Continuation of the restraints also has the added benefit of encouraging Japanese auto manufacturers to produce here, providing more jobs for American workers.

The currency imbalance between our two countries continues. The current exchange rate of almost 250 yen to the dollar acts like a 20-25% subsidy on every Japanese import sold in this country. Whether this is caused by "manipulation" of the yen, or the overvaluation of the dollar, this is an unacceptable burden on American auto manufacturers.

This situation is compounded by the Japanese tax system. Japan uses a commodity tax as a primary source of revenues, but this tax is rebated on exported products. This is not only an incentive to export, but as the only major industrialized nation without any similar sort of commodity or value-added tax, this system acts as an incentive to export to the United States in particular.

The Japanese continue to hold nearly 20% of the American auto market. During the last four years with the restraints they have even gotten as much as 23%. If the restraints are removed they could double that share, taking almost half the American market.

The country is facing new and critical challenges in the international ecomomy. The trade deficit for 1984 is expected to be well over $130 billion—almost twice last year's record high. The trade deficit with Japan will be over $30 billion—also breaking a record set last year. Over two-thirds of that record setting deficit with the Japanese is in autos and automobile products. Action must be taken on all fronts. We hope you will not let the upcoming meeting pass without expressing these sentiments to Prime Minister Nakasone in the strongest possible terms.

We look forward to hearing of the results of your meeting.

Sincerely,

DONALD W. RIEGLE, Jr.

REMARKS BY REPRESENTATIVE JACK KEMP

● Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, my distinguished colleague from the other Chamber, Representative JACK KEMP of New York, made some noteworthy and though-provoking remarks at a recent conference of the National Urban League. Representative KEMP is often quoted in the news these days, on many issues; I am certain that his remarks before the National Urban League will be of interest to my colleagues in the Senate, on both sides of the aisle.

I ask that the text of Representative KEMP's statement be printed in the RECORD.

The text follows:

BLACK AMERICANS AND THE REPUBLICAN PARTY

I'd like to thank John Jacob for his warm introduction and for inviting me to address the 1984 Conference of the National Urban League. I've considered John Jacob a friend for a long time, and it is characteristic of his habit of putting others first that when he invited me to speak, he said I would be doing him a personal favor—when or course he was doing me a great honor.

John does not seek the limelight, but as president of the National Urban League he has shown a steady capability and quiet courage in speaking candidly, both inside and outside the black community, about the challenges facing disadvantaged Americans, and what needs to be done. I've been hoping for a chance to say publicly how much I admire his leadership and dedication, as I do that of Vernon Jordan before him.

I would also like to pay tribute to the National Urban League. For 74 years, you have brought hope and an equal chance to the jobless, the homeless, the unskilled, the lost and the least. You have initiated self-help efforts, demonstrated what works, and built partnerships of trust with institutions that ought to get involved. You have earned the respect of business and labor, civic and civil rights leaders, and both political parties. Through personal experience with dedicated, people like Leroy Coles in Buffalo have learned how much the Urban League is doing on a local as well as a national level.

As you know, I don't stand before you as a candidate for anything—except for re-election to an eighth term as a Congressman from Buffalo. But I would like to take this opportunity to share with you some thoughts on the condition and direction of our Nation. And most of all, I would like to speak to you, from the heart, about something that has been on my mind for a long time—the relationship between black Americans and the Republican Party.

Back in February, my wife Joanne and I happened to watch a fascinating program on Tony Brown's Journal, called "The Longest Struggle." It was a dramatization of the lives of black Americans in the period after reconstruction, which he described as a "reign of terror" against blacks and Republicans, aimed at depriving black Americans of their 15th amendment right to vote. And at one point in his narration, Tony Brown said, "during this period the best friend that blacks had was the Republican Party, led by two radical Republican Congressmen," Representative Thaddeus Stevens of Pennsylvania, and Senator Charles Sumner of Massachusetts.

Frankly, rather than making me feel good as a Republican, this really saddened me. Perhaps it was the thought of how long it's been since black Americans could feel that way about my party. And perhaps the feeling was deepened because many people at various times have called me a "radical" Republican—and not always meaning it kindly. But according to the dictionary, "radical" means going to the roots of things. And I remember thinking how much the Republican Party needs radical Republicans in that sense.

The Republican Party would not even exist except for black Americans. Our party was born out of the struggle for equality and opportunity—the two always went together. When you look back at the years from 1960 to 1932, when Republicans dominated American politics, it was always because of two reasons: civil rights for all, and economic opportunity for all. Once chattel slavery was abolished and all Americans had the constitutional right to vote, campaigns were fought and won on slogans like "a full dinner pail," "honest money," and later, on restoring pre-world war one prosperity and "normalcy." Back then we Republicans seemed to know in our bones that without full and expanding economic opportunity for everyone, pressing for legal equality, important as it is, was not going to be enough. And as long as we pursued both, the American people, and especially black Americans, responded with loyalty.

But somewhere along the way the Republican Party blundered and strayed. Somehow we mislaid the key to prosperity and full economic opportunity for all. The policy failures of 1929-1932—when Republicans preached not economic growth but economic austerity, not internationalism but protectionism, not civil rights but "what's good for business is good for America"—paved the way for the massive electoral shift toward the new deal and the Democratic Party.

That shift is taken for granted today. But for black Americans, it didn't occur without a struggle. In 1932 the Republicans, after all, were still the party of Lincoln and civil rights, while the Democratic Party was still mired in reconstruction mentality, still implicity defending white supremacy.

I've met elderly blacks who can still remember black preachers preaching furiously against the Democrats and the new deal, threatening hellfire and damnation for those who would dare desert the party of Lincoln. A majority of black Americans still voted for Hoover in 1932. And in 1940, Dr. Ralph Bunche could still say that the black vote was "essentially Republican." The GOP had accumulated that much loyalty. While Republicans have a negative image with blacks today, consider what Roosevelt had to contend with. When a black minister opened one session of the 1936 Democratic Convention and a black Congressmen seconded FDR's nomination, Senator "Cotton Ed" Smith stormed out of the convention, saying, "I cannot and will not be a party to the recognition of the 14th and 15th amendments."

But it was no use. Hoover Republicans offered a balanced budget, and Roosevelt offered buttered bread. In a book called "Farewell to the Party of Lincoln": black politics in the age of FDR, N.J. Weiss has written: "It was not civil rights, it was jobs that brought blacks to the Democratic Party. Blacks became Democrats," Weiss observes, "because the Democrats had a program that was going to help the underprivileged, or the poor, more than the Republican Party." In fact, in this month's Ebony magazine there's an article that quotes an 82-year-old black activist named Valores Washington, who said: "I was born when there was nothing but black Republicans. I can remember when you couldn't find a black Democrat. But the Democrats fed blacks when they needed feeding."

The Democratic Party deserves its due, and I'm not ashamed to give it. Besides the new deal and the war on poverty, the Democratic Party—at least a large portion of it—carried to completion the fight to get rid of legal barriers to social and political participation for minorities. I'm proud that a Republican Chief Justice, appointed by a forceful Republican President, eliminated legal segregation of schools at Little Rock and elsewhere; and that overwhelming support by the Republican minority in Congress finally made the right to vote a reality for black Americans. But that doesn't change the fact that most people today, Republicans and Democrats alike, have come to consider the Democratic Party as the "natural" political home of black Americans.

For many reasons, I'm convinced that this situation is not healthy—not for blacks, not for my party, and most of all, not for America. I don't have to tell you how strong the temptation has been for the Democrats to take the black vote for granted, and for the Republicans to write it off. But I believe the Republican tendency comes, not from indifference or ill will, but from a kind of utter despair built up during 50 years of failure to reach out successfully to black Americans, and perhaps to fully understand the true basis of equal opportunity as well as we used to. I was impressed when Jesse Jackson said in San Francisco that "democracy guarantees opportunity, not success." Equal opportunity has been likened to a race where everyone starts out together and the prizes go to those who most merit them. What I think some Members of my party don't fully appreciate is the degree to which past impediments are preventing many blacks from beginning at the same starting line with others who never had those impediments.

My hope for the future of my country and my party rests on the fact that the American people are forgiving. They are forgiving because they are forward-looking. They are less interested, ultimately, in what you've done for them in the past—or to them, for that matter—than in what you plan to do for them in the future. This is why I am confident that if my party puts forward a vision of the future that embraces freedom and justice for all Americans, and a way of getting there, it will not be long before the Democrats find a tidal wave of "their" supporters returning to the Republican Party.

The recent Black Family Summit Conference, co-sponsored by the National Urban League and the NAACP, put the first item on their agenda for economic security for black families very simply: "Top priority should be placed on full employment at livable wages for all persons able and willing to work." And as John Jacob told us so eloquently last night, "jobs are the single central burning issue on the black agenda in 1984." I'm proud to say that it is the Republican Party which has begun to take the lead in moving the country toward full employment with no inflation.

Believe it or not, adopting the goal of full employment four years ago was considered a risky thing to do. Remember that back then, economists and politicians were almost universally telling us that it simply couldn't be done without high inflation, or perhaps not at all. The Carter administration was telling us that we were in the grip of a malaise, and Federal Reserve Chairman Paul Volcker said we had to lower our standard of living. Prof. Alfred Kahn, the chief "inflation-fighter," actually said that the solution to the energy crisis was to ride bicycles. And Robert Lekachman, one of the most prominent liberal Democratic economists in the country, summed up this mentality when he said: "The era of growth is over and the era of limits is upon us. It means the whole politics of the country has changed. All problems have become distributional. We already see it," he said, "in a whole set of divisive tendencies: black versus Jew, men versus women, and the whole debate over energy policy." How can you be fair to anyone in a country suffering from 13 percent inflation, 21 percent interest rates, closed factories and lost jobs?

If this country was not in fact going to tear itself apart in a struggle over pieces of a shrinking economic pie, we had to ignore the "experts," get this economy expanding again without inflation, and above all create jobs. I think it's fair to say that by 1980 the Democrats, like the Republicans in 1932, had lost the key to expanding economic opportunity. But frankly, we "radical" Republicans simply turned to the ideas of the last President who actually achieved full employment without inflation: John F. Kennedy, a Democrat. In fact, that's where we got the idea of cutting tax rates across the board.

Just after the 1980 elections, I saw an interview with Walter Mondale on what it was like to be a Democrat during President Kennedy's growth policies. It seemed like such a good description of what I hoped we could accomplish in the next four years that I saved it. Here's what he said about the early 1960s:

"At that time, we were able to cut tax rates, increase revenues, add jobs, fund new programs, and keep a stable dollar. That was a good time for a Democrat to be alive.

"We did a lot of good things. One of the reasons was that you could get our Nation in a more compassionate frame of mind when you were sharing additional resources from growth. Nobody was losing anything." "You could say: 'How about feeding the hungry? How about educating those poor kids? How about having some decent housing for these families that are living in desperate conditions?' People would say, 'That's right. Let's do some of that.' "

Ladies and gentleman, at that time, Walter Mondale got it right.

That's what we have tried to do by cutting tax rates across the board. The tax rate cuts were not designed to be an attack on Government or its revenues. They were an effort to get the country moving again. We need a safety net, but we also need a ladder of opportunity. And opportunities on the public payroll are no substitute for jobs in the private sector. But people naturally choose public jobs over private jobs when private employment isn't there. True, mistakes have been made. The across-the-board tax cuts were delayed. The Federal Reserve took us into a deep recession and kept us there too long with a misguided policy of high-interest-rate monetarism. And I've caught flak for saying so, but I still believe you can't make big cuts in social spending when the economy is flat on its back.

Despite these flaws, under this administration the 1981 tax cuts have powered a noninflationary economic expansion that began at the end of 1982. With inflation at its lowest level in 20 years, 6.7 million Americans have found work in the last 19 months. That's more jobs than the entire continent of Europe has created in a decade.

But it's not enough. It's not nearly enough. As Vernon Jordan says, putting America back to work means putting black Americans back to work.

I think we need to do more, much more. And I would like to outline some ideas that I believe can be effective in reaching the poor, the minorities and the inner cities.

But first I would like to say a word about keeping the recovery going. If we want to marshal the social resources we need to reach out to the poor and to assist the decayed inner cities it is imperative that we keep this economic expansion going, and going strongly. Strong economic expansion is the foundation for social justice: You can't help the poor by making America poor. An economic slowdown would stop or even reverse the progress on job creation, and the ones hurt most would be the last hired and first fired. It would also be an incalculable social and political blow—because it would intensify all the tensions and zero-sum wrangling in our country that Robert Lekachman talked about.

As I see it, there are two major threats to this economic expansion. One is monetary policy. Incredibly enough, the Federal Reserve Board believes that it must slow down economic growth and keep unemployment from falling too fast so as to keep inflation under control. That's not just insensitive; it's irrational. Inflation is not caused by too many people working. When commodity prices are falling sharply as they have in the past few months, and the dollar is hitting record highs, this means high interest rates are signaling that money is too tight, not too loose; we have deflation, not inflation. If the Fed doesn't change course and allow interest rates to come down, we could see a slowdown, a rise in unemployment, defaults in the third world, further despair in our cities—and higher, not lower deficits.

The other major threat to expansion would be the enactment of a major tax increase. And if you will forgive me for a moment for being partisan, the bigger threat comes from the democratic, not the Republican candidate for President. Mr. Mondale has promised a big tax increase across the board to reduce the deficit. The President says it would be counterproductive. I wish that Mr. Mondale would read a speech that President Roosevelt gave during the campaign of 1936, when the Republicans were saying all the same things about the deficit that the Democrats are saying today. The speech was titled, "The only way to keep the Government out of the red is to keep the people out of the red."

In that speech, Mr. Roosevelt explained: "The money to run the Government comes from taxes; and the tax revenue depends for its size on the size of the national income. When the incomes and the values and transactions of the country are on the downgrade, then tax receipts go on the downgrade too. If the national income continues to decline, then the Government cannot run without going into the red. The only way to keep the Government out of the red is to keep the people out of the red. And so we (have) to balance the budget of the American people before we (can) balance the budget of the national Government. That makes sense doesn't it?" FDR asked. "To pile on vast new taxes would get us nowhere because values (would go) down, and that makes sense too."

In that same speech, Mr. Roosevelt addressed another of Mr. Mondale's recent worries. He said, "and now a word about this foolish fear about the crushing load the debt will impose on your children and mine. This debt is not going to be paid by oppressive taxation on future generations. It is not going to be paid by taking away the hard-won savings of the present generation. It is going to be paid out of an increased national income and increased individual incomes produced by increasing national prosperity. The deficit of the national Government has been steadily declining for three years running," he pointed out.

And the deficit is declining right now as we put people back to work. Over the past year, revenues have risen at a rate of 12 percent, while spending has risen only 4 percent. Despite all the talk you've heard, the deficit has never reached $200 billion, and it never will—if we can keep the economy expanding and continue to move America toward full employment and price stability, the stated goal of the Humphrey-Hawkins legislation.

President Roosevelt used to say that we have nothing to fear but fear itself. I hope it never comes to be said of his heirs to the leadership of the Democratic Party, that they have nothing to offer but fear itself. Democrats who cherish the future of their party had better hope that the "new realism" does not turn out to be the "old Hooverism." We Republicans will wish then as much luck as we had with it.

As I said, while keeping the economic recovery going, we still must do more for the poor and the unemployed, especially in our inner cities. As far as I'm concerned, we have barely begun to address the problem of expanding economic opportunity to everyone. But Bobby Kennedy was right when he said, "to ignore the potential of private enterprise is to fight the war on poverty with a single platoon, while great armies are left to stand aside."

I am proposing a three-part urban initiative, and I want to make it a plank in the Republican platform. First, a complete overhaul of our tax system, designed especially to break the poverty cycle that is holding back so many low-income Americans. Second, a new Urban Homesteading Act designed to bring us closer to the national goal stated in the 1949 Housing Act, of "a decent home and a decent living environment for every American family." And third, an inner cities private-sector jobs creation bill to expand opportunities for inner city residents.

First. Senator Bob Kasten and I, along with many colleagues, have proposed legislation to replace our current complicated, unfair and unintelligible income tax system with a fair and simple tax that closes loopholes and lowers tax rates. There is much said today in both parties about tax reform. And that is a good sign that reform may be possible. Some think tax reform means taking more taxes from some people and giving it to others; but true reform is aimed at expanding the income of everyone—permitting wealth to be created, not just shifted around.

One of the most glaring injustices today is that there are people below the poverty level who are paying, in effect, the highest marginal tax rates in the country. For example, what happens when a poor black woman drawing AFDC payments, food stamps, and other benefits tries to increase her income by finding full-time work? She discovers that between paying income taxes and losing benefits, she loses between 80 cents and $1.50 for every additional dollar of income. Her effective marginal tax rate is between 80 and 150 percent. That's one key reason for the poverty cycle.

The Kemp-Kasten tax bill helps poor people by doubling the personal exemption for each family member to $2,000, increasing the standard deductions, and excluding one fifth of the first $40,000 of wages from taxation. This means that almost a million and a half working poor would be completely taken off the Federal income tax rolls. A family of four would not pay income tax on the first $14,375 of income, compared with less than $9,000 under current law. And because we index the tax Code against inflation, no American below the poverty level will ever again pay Federal income taxes under this plan.

Second, owning your own home is nearly synonymous with the American dream. Yet today homeownership for the urban poor is nearly impossible, when decent homes in any city can't be bought for much below $40,000 or $50,000, at double digit mortgage rates.

This week I'm introducing legislation addressed to those thwarted hopes. Under the Urban Homesteading Act, the poor living in public housing will have the chance to buy their homes from the Government at a large discount, or to manage their own projects. Under my bill a tenant or tenant association could purchase their dwelling at only 25 percent of market value. And the public housing authority could "take back" a mortgage at reasonable rates. Tenants could also build equity toward their down payment by maintaining the housing project.

This program has important tenant protections. First, ownership is completely voluntary. Second, there can't be any evictions of current tenants. Third, housing must be brought up to minimum standards before they are sold. And fourth, homeownership would be transferred to tenants only after it is certified that they can afford the cost.

This program would benefit both the urban poor and taxpayers as a whole. Taxpayers would gain from reduced operating subsidies as public housing is turned over to tenant owners. But the effort is really concerned with more than buildings or budgets. It deals with the overall problem of community and neighborhood development. There are some tenant managed projects operating today, and they have relieved some very difficult social problems by reducing crime, drug abuse, and even teenage pregnancies. Homeownership also encourages stable and intact family life. Considering the tremendous gain in pride, dignity, and sense of community; the longer outlook on life and the future; the new reasons to work and save—this kind of home ownership initiative would help more Americans realize the American dream.

Third, and linking the first two initiatives, we must have enterprise zones. Ghetto and barrio residents know only too well the phenomenon known as "redlining," which has pushed the deterioration in some areas even further down the slope of despair. The idea of urban enterprise zones is to turn those red lines into green lines, by providing incentives for people to work, hire, invest, and start up new business ventures in cities with officially defined "pockets of poverty" where unemployment is particularly high. It only takes common sense to realize that we can't have more employees without more employers. "Enterprise zones," to quote Journalist Carl Rowan, "will make jobs available to many and thus give hope to almost all. And hope may be the most precious item at this time."

On no other issue has a wider, more devoted and broadly based consensus emerged than on Kemp-Garcia urban enterprise zone legislation. Members of the Congressional Black Caucus have endorsed it. The Urban League, I'm happy to say, has supported the idea. My friend and colleague from Philadelphia, Bill Gray, has called it one of the most important pieces of urban legislation in years. Hispanics, liberals, conservatives, Democrats, Republicans, big city mayors, suburban and rural areas, all support it as a constructive and progressive effort to help put our people to work in productive, real jobs in our inner cities and other depressed areas.

This measure has passed the Republican-controlled Senate twice this session, yet Speaker Tip O'Neill of Boston and Ways and Means Committee Chairman Dan Rostenkowski of Chicago are preventing Congress from voting on this jobs-creating bill. I hope you'll forgive me another partisan comment if I say that we heard a lot in San Francisco about the Democratic Party's compassion for the poor. Let's just hope they don't love the poor so much that they're trying to keep them poor by bottling up enterprise zone legislation.

What I've just outlined is the nucleus of a plan that I think can help restore the hopes and dreams of inner city residents. I agree with the Urban League that such proposals should be considered and adjunct, not a substitute for current programs. And we must do still more. I joined recently with Bill Gray in introducing the "Pre-Vocational and Community-Based Organization Act." This bill will bring the Urban League and other community-based organizations like Rev. Leon Sullivan's Opportunities Industrialization Centers (OIC), into the different boards and councils that administer vocational education programs, and make possible grants and set-asides. This is another important way to expand invaluable self-help efforts for our urban minorities and rural poor who need a helping hand.

Ladies and gentlemen, we can't allow fighting poverty to become passe. The civil rights revolution opened doors that had been closed by law. But as Martin Luther King, Jr., reminded us, it will not be complete until America's doors of economic opportunity are fully opened and our minorities are integrated into the mainstream of the American economy. When black Americans have struggled for decades for the right to buy a ticket on the train of opportunity, we can't allow that train to be stopped in its tracks. We can't stop thinking creatively about fighting poverty, and renewing our cities. The American people are compassionate. They aren't against helping people. They aren't against welfare. But we must measure our compassion not by how many people are on welfare, but by how few need welfare. We've learned that equal opportunity doesn't mean making the rich poor; it means making everyone better off, from the bottom up. It is true, as some say, that that Government is best which governs least; but it is equally true that that Government is best which does most for people. Leadership requires understanding the proper role for Government.

I agree with Walter Mondale, that we don't need a referendum on the past. We need a vision for the future. But I would remind him that this means more than saying you want to get to the land of milk and honey. It means showing us exactly how we can get to the promised land. And black Americans this year should seriously ask the Democratic Party—as well as the Republican Party—exactly what they have in mind for the United States of America in 1985 and beyond. It's my firm belief that whichever party can show the poor, minorities, and all Americans that it has both the necessary vision and the means to achieve that vision, will command the loyalty of the American people.

As a Republican, I am going to work to make sure that my party is the majority party in coming years. To do that, we have to get back to our roots--become radical again. We must be the party of all the people—even the ones that haven't voted for us lately. If we do our job—and I think we can—then one day millions of black Americans are going to surprise themselves by voting Republican again.

And do you know what? When that happens, it will restore something to my party that's been missing for almost half a century. Because the Republican Party won't be whole again, until black Americans consider it their natural home again.

Thank you.●

S. 2217, THE TANDEM TRUCK SAFETY ACT OF 1984

● Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, on October 2, the Senate passed S. 2217, the Tandem Truck Safety Act of 1984, also comprising the provisions of S. 2174, the Motor Carrier Safety Act of 1984. On October 11, the House and the Senate passed a modified version of S. 2217, and on October 30, President Reagan signed this bill into law. This important legislation, which is the culmination of several years of work and study, will ensure that motor carrier operations on our Nation's highways are truly safe.

I would like to take this opportunity to comment on one of the provisions included in the final legislation that was not part of the original Senate bill. Section 223 of S. 2217, "Splash and Spray Suppressant Devices," amends section 414 of the Surface Transportation Assistance Act of 1982 [STAA]. The 1982 legislation required DOT to establish minimum standards for the performance and installation of splash and spray suppression devices for use on truck tractors, semitrailers, and trailers operated on interstate highways. The STAA required that new truck tractors, semitrailers, and trailers meet the DOT standards by January 1985 and that all truck tractors, semitrailers, and trailers meet the DOT standards by January 1988. DOT was required to issue the standards in January of 1984. Because DOT has not yet issued these standards, section 223 changes the effective dates of the STAA's splash and spray suppressant devices requirement to 1 and 4 years respectively, after the date on which DOT establishes the standards for new and all truck tractors, semitrailers, and trailers which operate on interstate highways.

The purpose of this provision is to ensure that there is no confusion as to when compliance with the splash and spray standards will be necessary. This provision does not diminish my commitment to seeing that these devices are installed on trucks. I intend to continue to monitor DOT's rulemaking efforts on this matter, and I am hopeful that the splash and spray standards can be promptly issued.

I would also like to note that S. 2217 contains language clarifying the relationship of the safety provisions of this act affecting hazardous materials carriers to the provisions of the Hazardous Materials Transportation Act [HMTA]. Specifically, the language in section 206(b) is intended to ensure that new regulations pertaining to the transportation of hazardous materials will be promulgated under the relevant statute. This clarification is not intended to inhibit the Secretary's discretion in promulgating amended hazardous materials transportation regulations which are responsive to the needs of the public, State and local governments, and industry. Obviously, operational and routing regulations must be reviewed and amended to be responsive to changing technology and circumstances. The language of section 206(b) simply seeks to ensure that such amendments are promulgated under the HMTA.

I would also like to note that the final version of S. 2217, as passed by both Houses, was nearly 2 years in the making during the 98th Congress. Without the help and support of numerous individuals and groups, it would not have been possible for my staff and me to secure enactment of this vital legislation.

My distinguished colleague from New York, Senator MOYNIHAN, sponsor of the original version of S. 2217, was a constant supporter of this legislation. His interest and efforts in behalf of the final bill are much appreciated. Senator PACKWOOD, chairman of the Commerce Committee and author of provisions in the bill which provide productivity gains to the trucking industry, was a strong advocate and staunch supporter of this legislation. Senator HOLLINGS, the committee's ranking minority member, also was instrumental in moving this legislation. In addition, Senators PROXMIRE and METZENBAUM worked with us on improving this legislation prior to its initial Senate passage on October 2, most notably in the areas of State regulation, and continued to work with us through enactment of S. 2217.

I would also like to commend my House colleagues for their swift action on this legislation. I would especially like to note the contributions of House Public Works Committee Chairman JAMES HOWARD, Ranking Minority Member GENE SNYDER, Surface Transportation Subcommittee Chairman GLENN ANDERSON and Ranking Subcommittee Minority Member BUD SHUSTER.

Further, Mr. President, Karen Borlaug Phillips of the Commerce Committee majority staff and Linda Morgan of the minority staff worked tirelessly on this legislation. Without their long hours and hard work this legislation would not have been possible. In addition, Bruce Heiman of Senator MOYNIHAN's staff, Ruth Fleischer of Senator PROXMIRE's staff, and Dick Woodruff of Senator METZENBAUM's staff made important contributions to this effort and were extremely helpful to my very able assistant, Walter McCormick.

The other individuals and groups who worked with us on this legislation are too numerous to mention here. I would, however, like to especially note the contributions made to this legislative effort by the following individuals and organizations: American Association of Motor Vehicle Administrators, Earl Eisenhart; American Bus Association, Susan Perry, Charlie Webb; American Trucking Associations, Inc., Will Johns, Allan Jones, Ken Stinger; Environmental Policy Institute, Fred Millar; Fertilizer Institute, Diane Bateman; Greyhound Corp., Jim Corcoran; International Brotherhood of Teamsters, R.V. Durham, Suzanne Kossan, Tim Scully, Dave Sweeney; Interstate Commerce Commission, Alice Curtin, Jan Rosenak; National Association of Governors' Highway Safety Respresentatives, Judie Stone; National Association of Regulatory Utility Commissioners, Linda Kent, Jill Rowe; National Association of Wholesaler-Distributors, Virginia Bliss, Dick Turney; National Conference of State Legislatures, Kathy Brennan-Wiggins; National Governors Association, Charlyn Cowan, Ron Ross; National League of Cities, Carol Kocheisen; Private Truck Council, Dick Henderson, Rick Schweitzer; Roadway Express, Tim Lynch; Trailways, Inc., Bob Forman; United Bus Owners of America, Paul Nagle; United Parcel Service, Jim Rogers; U.S. Department of Transportation, John Collins, Phil Haseltine, Tom Holian, Joe La Sala, Nancy Miller, Ken Pierson, Matt Scocozza, David Sloane.

Lastly, Mr. President, I ask that a section-by-section analysis of S. 2217, as enacted, be printed in the RECORD, in its entirety.

The analysis follows:

SECTION-BY-SECTION SUMMARY

S. 2217—THE "TANDEM TRUCK SAFETY ACT OF 1984"

Title I

Section 101—Short Title

This section states that this title may be cited as the "Tandem Truck Safety Act of 1984".

Section 102—Exemption from Length Requirements

This section amends section 411 of the Surface Transportation Assistance Act of 1982 (STAA) by adding a new subsection (i). This subsection enables the Governor of a State to notify the Secretary of Transportation of his/her determination that any specific segment of the national system of Interstate and Defense Highways is not capable of safely accommodating the longer trucks and doubles combinations authorized for nationwide use by the 1982 Act in sections 411(a) and 411(c), respectively. The Governor may request that the Secretary exempt such segment from sections 411(a) and/or 411(c).

Before notifying the Secretary, the Governor is to consult with units of local government within the State in which the specific highway segment is located, as well as the Governor of any State adjacent to that State that might be directly affected by the exemption. As part of these consultations, consideration is to be given to any potential alternative route that can safely accommodate these larger trucks and serves the area in which the segment for which an exemption is sought is located. The Governor must transmit to the Secretary specific evidence of safety problems that supports his/her determinations and the results of the consultation regarding alternative routing.

If the Secretary determines, upon request by a Governor or on the Secretary's own initiative, that any segment of the National System of Interstate and Defense Highways is not capable of safely accommodating these larger trucks, the Secretary shall exempt such segment from subsections (a) and/or (c) of section 411. Before making such a determination, the Secretary is to consider any possible alternative route that serves the area in which the segment under consideration for exemption is located.

The Secretary is to make such a determination within 120 days after the date of receipt of notification from a Governor or the date on which the Secretary initiates action with respect to such segment. If the Secretary determines that such determination will not be made within that time period, the Secretary shall immediately notify the Congress and shall furnish the reasons for the delay, information regarding the resources assigned, and the projected completion date for any such determination. The Secretary shall only make such a determination after affording interested parties notice and the opportunity for comment.

Section 103—Exemption from Width Requirements

This section amends section 416 by adding a new subsection (e). This subsection establishes a procedure identical to that established under Section 102 by which the Governor of a State or the Secretary may seek to exempt a segment of the National System of Interstate and Defense Highways from the 102-inch width requirement of section 416(a) of the STAA. If the Secretary grants such an exemption, a State may impose a width limitation of less than 102 inches for trucks on that exempted segment.

Section 104—Conforming Amendments

This section provides various conforming amendments necessitated by Sections 102 and 103 of this Act.

Section 105—Designation of Highways Subject to Width Limitation

This section amends section 416 of the STAA to authorize the Department of Transportation (DOT) to include highways with lane widths of less than 12 feet as part of the nationwide route network for use by 102-inch wide trucks if the Secretary determines that such designation is consistent with highway safety. Any Federal-aid highway which was not designated under Section 416 of the STAA on June 5, 1984, may be designated under Section 105 of this Act only with the agreement of the Governor of the State in which the highway is located.

Section 106—Reasonable Access

This section amends Section 412 of the STAA to extend the reasonable access guarantees of the STAA to truck tractor single trailer units of combination vehicles described in section 411(c) of the STAA. This provision applies to individual trailers which are 102-inches wide and not more than 28½ feet long. Section 106 provides that no State may deny reasonable access to points of loading or unloading for truck tractor single trailer units described in the STAA. This section does not, however, prevent State or local governments from imposing reasonable restrictions, based on safety considerations.

Title II

Section 201—Short Title

This section states that this title may be cited as the "Motor Carrier Safety Act of 1984".

Section 202—Purposes

This section states that the purposes of this title are to promote the safe operation of commercial motor vehicles, to minimize dangers to the health of operators of commercial motor vehicles and other employees, and to assure increased compliance with traffic laws and with the commercial motor vehicle safety and health rules, regulations, standards, and orders issued pursuant to this Act.

Section 203—Findings

This section states the Congressional findings, which emphasize the need to enhance commercial motor vehicle safety, the need for improved, more uniform safety measures and strengthened enforcement, the need for enhanced protection of the health of commercial motor vehicle operators, and the valuable assistance that can be provided to the Federal Government by the States.

Section 204—Definitions

This section defines 13 terms used throughout this title. The provisions of this title are applicable to commercial motor vehicles used on highways in interstate commerce to transport passengers or property: (1) if such vehicle has a gross vehicle weight rating of 10,001 or more pounds; (2) if such vehicle is designed to transport more than 15 passengers, including the driver; or (3) if such vehicle is used in the transportation of hazardous materials which are transported in a quantity requiring placarding under regulations issued by the Secretary of Transportation under the Hazardous Materials Transportation Act.

Section 205—Duties

This section requires that employers and employees comply with commercial motor vehicle safety regulations issued by the Secretary under this title.

Section 206—Federal Regulations

This section requires the Secretary to issue commercial motor vehicle safety regulations within 18 months after enactment of this Act. These regulations are to establish minimum Federal safety standards and at a minimum, are to ensure that: (1) commercial motor vehicles are safely maintained, equipped, loaded, and operated; (2) the responsibilities imposed upon drivers do not impair their ability to operate vehicles safely; (3) the physical condition of drivers is adequate to enable them to drive safely; and (4) the operation of commercial motor vehicles does not have deleterious effects on the physical condition of such drivers. The Secretary, however, is precluded from eliminating or modifying any existing motor carrier safety rule pertaining exclusively to the maintenance, equipment, loading, or operation of vehicles carrying hazardous materials unless and until an equivalent or more stringent regulation has been promulgated under the Hazardous Materials Transportation Act (HMTA). Before issuing these regulations, the Secretary, to the extent practicable, is to consider: (1) costs and benefits; and (2) State laws and regulations pertaining to commercial motor vehicle safety laws and regulations in order to minimize unnecessary preemption of the State laws and regulations under this Act.

If the Secretary determines that any proceeding initiated to issue any regulation under this section will not be completed within 18 months after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary is to immediately notify the Congress and furnish the reasons for the delay, information regarding the resources assigned, and the projected completion date for any such proceeding. The Secretary is to continue to notify the Congress at the end of every 60-day period thereafter during which any such proceeding remains incomplete.

If the Secretary does not issue commercial motor vehicle safety regulations under this section, the regulations issued by the Secretary prior to the date of enactment of this Act and in effect on that date shall, for purposes of this title, be deemed to be regulations issued by the Secretary under this section.

After notice and an opportunity for comment, the Secretary may waive, in whole or in part, application of any regulation issued under this section with respect to any person or class of persons if the Secretary determines that such waiver is not contrary to the public interest and is consistent with the safe operation of commercial motor vehicles. The Secretary is to waive application of the regulations issued under this section with respect to schoolbuses, unless the Secretary determines that making such regulations applicable to schoolbuses is necessary for public safety.

Section 207—Submission of State Regulations for Review

This section provides that within 6 months after enactment of this Act, any State which enacts, adopts, issues, or has in effect any commercial motor vehicle safety law or regulation and wants to have in effect and enforce such law or regulation after the last day of the 60-month period beginning on the date of enactment of this Act shall submit to the Secretary and the Safety Panel a copy of such law or regulation. Any State which enacts, adopts, or issues any commercial motor vehicle safety law or regulation later than 6 months after the date of enactment of this Act shall submit to the Secretary and the Safety Panel, immediately after such enactment, adoption, or issuance, a copy of such law or regulation.

Not later than 60 days after enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall issue initial guidelines to assist the States in compiling and submitting State laws and regulations and other information under this section.

As soon as practicable, but not later than such time as the Safety Panel may establish, any State which submits a law or regulation to the Safety Panel: (1) shall indicate in writing if the law or regulation has the same effect as, is less stringent than, or is additional to or more stringent than any regulation issued by the Secretary; and (2) shall submit to the Safety Panel such other information as the panel or the Secretary may require. If any State fails to submit any State commercial motor vehicle safety law or regulation in accordance with this section, the Safety Panel is to analyze the laws and regulations of such State and determine which of that State's laws and regulations pertain to commercial motor vehicle safety.

Section 208—Review and Preemption of State Regulation

This section provides that after the last day of the 60-month period beginning on the date of the enactment of this Act, no State may have in effect or enforce any State commercial motor vehicle safety law or regulation which the Secretary finds under this section may not be in effect and enforced.

Within 18 months after the date of the enactment of this Act, and annually thereafter, the Safety Panel shall analyze the laws and regulations of each State and determine which of these laws and regulations pertain to commercial motor vehicle safety. Within 12 months after the date on which the Secretary issues any regulation under section 206 or within 12 months after the date on which a State law or regulation is determined to pertain to commercial motor vehicle safety, whichever is later, the Safety Panel is to determine: (1) if such law or regulation has the same effect as, is less stringent than, or is additional to or more stringent than the Federal regulation issued by the Secretary under section 206; and (2) with respect to any State law or regulation which is additional to or more stringent than the Federal regulation, if there is no safety benefit associated with the State law or regulation, if such State law or regulation is incompatible with the Federal regulation, or if enforcement of such State law or regulation would be an undue burden on interstate commerce. The Safety Panel is to notify the Secretary of the determinations made under this subsection.

The Secretary is to review each State commercial motor vehicle safety law and regulation. Within 18 months after the date the Secretary is notified by the Safety Panel of a determination regarding a State law or regulation, the Secretary is to conduct a rulemaking proceeding to determine whether or not such law or regulation may be in effect and enforced, and shall issue a final rule.

If the Secretary finds that the State law or regulation has the same effect as the comparable Federal standard, the State law or regulation may be in effect and enforced after the last day of the 60-month period beginning on the date of enactment of this Act. If the Secretary finds that the State law or regulation is less stringent than the Federal standard, the State law or regulation will be preempted after the last day of the 60-month period beginning on the date of enactment of this Act. If the Secretary finds that the State law or regulation is additional to or more stringent than the Federal standard, the State law or regulation may be in effect and enforced after the last day of the 60-month period beginning on the date of enactment of this Act, unless the Secretary finds that: (1) there is no safety benefit associated with the State law or regulation; (2) the State law or regulation is incompatible with the regulation issued by the Secretary; or (3) enforcement of the State law or regulation would be an undue burden on interstate commerce. If the Secretary makes such a finding, the State law or regulation would be preempted. Not later than 10 days after making a determination that a State law or regulation is to be preempted, the Secretary shall notify the State in writing of such determination.

Any person, including a State, may petition the Secretary for a waiver from a determination of the Secretary that a State law or regulation is to be preempted. The Secretary shall grant such waiver, as expeditiously as possible, if the person demonstrates to the satisfaction of the Secretary that such waiver is not contrary to the public interest and is consistent with the safe operation of commercial motor vehicles. The decision to grant or deny a petition for a waiver shall be made only after the Secretary has afforded the petitioner an opportunity for a hearing on the record.

This section contains a procedure by which a person, including a State, adversely affected by the Secretary's determination with respect to a State law or regulation or by the Secretary's grant or denial of a waiver petition may seek judicial review of the Secretary's decision.

The Secretary may extend, for an additional period not to exceed 12 months, the 60-month period specified in this section. After the last day of the 48-month period beginning on the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary may initiate a rulemaking to review any State commercial motor vehicle safety law or regulation.

Section 209—Commercial Motor Vehicle Safety Regulatory Review Panel

This section requires the Secretary to establish the "Commercial Motor Vehicle Safety Regulatory Review Panel", to analyze and review State motor carrier safety laws and regulations. This panel is to: (1) carry out those duties designated to the Safety Panel under sections 207 and 208 of this Act; (2) conduct a study to evaluate the need, if any, for any additional Federal assistance to the States to enable the States to enforce the regulations issued by the Secretary under section 206, and to determine other methods of furthering the objectives of this title; and (3) make recommendations to the Secretary based on the result of this study.

The Safety Panel is to be composed of the following 15 members: (1) the Secretary or his/her designate; (2) seven individuals appointed by the Secretary from among the persons who represent the interests of States and political subdivisions thereof and whose names have been submitted to the Secretary by the Senate Committee on Commerce, Science and Transportation or the House Committee on Public Works and Transportation; and (3) seven individuals appointed by the Secretary from among persons who represent the interest of business, consumer, labor, and safety groups and whose names have been submitted to the Secretary by the Senate Commerce Committee and the House Public Works Committee. Individuals are to be selected by the Secretary on the basis of their knowledge, expertise, or experience regarding commercial motor vehicle safety. Half of the appointments are to be made from names submitted by the Senate Commerce Committee and half are to be made from names submitted by the House Public Works Committee. Each of these Committees is to submit to the Secretary the names of 20 individuals qualified to serve on the Safety Panel.

Members of the Safety Panel are to be appointed for a term of seven years. A vacancy in the Safety Panel is to be filled in the manner in which the original appointment was made. Members of the Safety Panel will serve without pay, except that they shall receive per diem and travel expenses. Upon request of the Safety Panel, the Secretary shall detail Department of Transportation personnel and provide office space, supplies, equipment, and other support services to the Safety Panel and its staff as may be necessary.

The Safety Panel or any member authorized by the Safety Panel, may hold hearings, take testimony, and take such other actions as the Safety Panel or such member may deem advisable to carry out the duties of the Safety Panel.

Section 210—Inspection

This section requires that each commercial motor vehicle pass an inspection of all safety equipment required under part 393 of subchapter B of chapter III of title 49, Code of Federal Regulations. The Secretary shall, by rule, establish Federal standards for commercial motor vehicle inspections and for retention by employers of records of such inspections. These standards shall provide for annual or more frequent inspections unless the Secretary finds that another inspection system is equally effective. Within 60 days after the enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall initiate a rulemaking on part 393 and the inspection and retention procedures. Amendments to the regulations shall be issued and published in the Federal Register within one year after this rulemaking is initiated and shall become effective on the date of publication in the Federal Register.

This section provides that this section and Section 402 of the Surface Transportation Assistance Act of 1982, are not intended to be construed as: (1) preventing any State or voluntary group of States from imposing more stringent standards for use in their own periodic roadside commercial motor vehicle inspection programs; (2) preventing any State from having in effect and enforcing a commercial motor vehicle inspection program which the Secretary determines is as effective as the Federal standards; (3) preventing any State from having in effect and enforcing a commercial motor vehicle inspection program which meets the requirements for membership in the Commercial Vehicle Safety Alliance (CVSA) as such requirements were in effect on the date of enactment of this Act; and (4) requiring any State which has in effect and is enforcing a CVSA program or a program which is as effective as the Federal program to enforce the Federal standards or to adopt the Federal inspection program. The Federal standards shall have no effect and shall not be enforced in States with programs as effective as the Federal program or in States participating in the CVSA program if the Secretary determines that this is in the public interest and consistent with public safety.

If, after notice and an opportunity for a hearing, the Secretary determines that any State participating in the CVSA program is not enforcing this program in a manner which achieves the objectives of this section and if, after making such a determination, the Secretary provides such State with a six month period in which to improve the enforcement of its program, the Federal standards shall preempt the CVSA program in that State.

A periodic inspection of a commercial motor vehicle in accordance with the Federal standards shall be recognized as adequate in every State for the period of such inspection. This does not, however, prohibit a State from making random inspections of commercial motor vehicles.

Section 211—Powers of the Secretary

This section provides the Secretary of Transportation with broad administrative powers to assist in the implementation of this title. This section also requires the Secretary, or the Secretary's agent, in carrying out inspection investigative functions to consult with employers and employees and their authorized representatives and offer them a right of accompaniment, as appropriate.

Section 212—Duty to Investigate Complaints; Protection of Complainants

This section requires the Secretary to timely investigate non-frivolous written complaints alleging a substantial violation of any regulation issued under this title. The Secretary is also required to take steps to protect the identity of complainants.

Section 213—Penalties

This section amends section 507 of title 49, United States Code, to allow the Attorney General, at the request of the Secretary of Transportation, to bring an action for equitable relief to redress a violation of this Act of existing Federal commercial motor vehicle safety standards.

This section also amends section 521(b) of title 49 to set forth civil and criminal penalties available to the Secretary of Transportation for enforcing violations of this Act or existing Federal commercial motor vehicle safety standards and to establish the procedure for the Secretary to follow if the Secretary finds that a violation has occurred.

This section provides for a civil penalty of up to $500 for a recordkeeping violation; the total of all recordkeeping violations may not exceed $2,500. If the Secretary determines that a serious pattern of safety violations, other than recordkeeping requirements, exists or has occurred, a civil penalty of up to $1,000 for each offense may be assessed, to a maximum fine for each such pattern of violations of $10,000. If the Secretary determines that a substantial health or safety violation exists or has occurred which could reasonably lead to, or has resulted in, serious personal injury or death, a civil penalty of up to $10,000 may be assessed for each offense. However, no civil penalty, except recordkeeping penalties, may be assessed against an employee unless the Secretary of Transportation determines that the employee's actions constituted gross negligence and reckless disregard for safety, in which case such employee shall be liable for a civil penalty up to $1,000. In determining the amount of the penalty, the Secretary is to consider the nature, circumstances, extent, and gravity of the violation committed and, with respect to the violator, the degree of culpability, history of prior offenses, ability to pay, effect on ability to continue to do business, and such other matters as justice and public safety may require.

This section also provides criminal penalties for employers and for employees operating a commercial motor vehicle who knowingly and willfully violate the provisions of section 3102 of title 49, United States Code, or this Act. Penalties for an employer are a fine of up to $25,000 and/or imprisonment not to exceed 1 year. An employee is subject to a $2,500 fine.

This section authorizes the Secretary to order a vehicle or an employee operating a commercial motor vehicle out of service or to order an employer to cease all or part of his commercial motor vehicle operations if the Secretary determines that an imminent hazard to safety exists. "Imminent hazard" is defined as any condition of vehicle, employee, or commercial motor vehicle operations which is likely to result in serious injury or death if not discontinued immediately.

This section requires the Secretary to conduct a study of the effectiveness of the civil and criminal penalties established under this section in deterring violations of commercial motor vehicle safety regulations and in effectively prosecuting such violations when they occur. This study is to be submitted to the Congress, together with legislative recommendations, not later than 2 years after the date of enactment of this Act.

Section 214—Litigation Authority

This section amends section 413 of the Surface Transportation Assistance Act of 1982 to require the Department of Justice to represent the Department of Transportation in litigation related to highway safety.

Section 215—Certification of Safety Fitness

This section requires DOT, in cooperation with the Interstate Commerce Commission (ICC), to establish, by rule, safety fitness standards applicable to commercial motor vehicles—both to carriers regulated by the ICC and those which are exempt and including persons seeking new or additional motor carrier operating authority. The safety fitness procedure shall include: specific initial and continuing requirements to prove safety fitness; a means of determining whether carriers meet these safety fitness requirements; and specific time deadlines for action by DOT and the ICC in making safety fitness determinations. The Secretary of Transportation is to submit a copy of this safety fitness procedure to Congress with 1 year of enactment of this Act.

This section also prohibits the ICC from granting motor common or contract carrier operating authority to an applicant that does not meet the safety fitness requirements established pursuant to this section.

Section 216—Heavy Truck Study

This section requires the Secretary to conduct a study of safety characteristics of heavy trucks, the unique problems related to heavy trucks, and the manner in which such trucks are driven. The comprehensive study required under this section is to include an examination of the handling, braking, stability and crashworthiness of heavy trucks, as well as the programs and needs of enforcement agencies to assure compliance with traffic laws by commercial motor vehicle drivers. This study is to be submitted to Congress by September 30, 1986. This section authorizes appropriation of such sums as may be necessary to conduct this study for fiscal years 1986 and 1987.

Section 217—Truck Occupant Protection

This section directs DOT to undertake a study of crash protection for truck occupants. This study is to examine potential and known hazards to truck occupants and means of improving truck occupant safety, and include potential performance standards, if any, to be met by truck manufacturers. This study is to be submitted to Congress within two years of the date of enactment of this Act. This section authorizes appropriation of such sums as may be necessary to undertake this study during fiscal years 1986 and 1987.

Section 218—Study of Safety Performance of Commercial Motor Vehicles

This section requires the Secretary to conduct a study of the safety performance of commercial motor vehicles. The study is to examine the effectiveness of individual State safety regulations governing the operations of trucks and bus in promoting safety and investigate the need to subject such operations, in whole or in part, to the Federal commercial motor vehicle safety regulations. The Secretary is to submit to Congress a report on the findings of this study within 2 years after the date of enactment of this Act.

Section 219—Study of Safety-Related Devices

This section requires the Secretary to undertake a study of the effectiveness of existing regulations regarding emergency warning devices required to be carried on buses, trucks, truck-tractors, and motor-driven vehicles which are involved in emergency situations. The study is also to investigate the potential costs and benefits of requiring passenger automobile operators to carry emergency warning devices and to examine the relative benefits of various types of warning devices in enhancing highway safety. This study is to be submitted to Congress within 18 months of enactment of this Act. This section authorizes appropriation of such sums as are necessary in fiscal years 1986 and 1987 to undertake this study.

Section 220—Safety Study; Federal Coordination

This section directs the Secretary of Transportation, in consultation with the Director of the National Institute for Occupational Safety and Health and the Secretary of Labor, to conduct a study of health hazards to which employees engaged in the operation of commercial motor vehicles are exposed and to develop findings regarding the most appropriate method for regulating and protecting the health of operators of commercial motor vehicles. This study is to be submitted to Congress within one year of the date of enactment.

This section also requires the Secretary of Transportation to coordinate the activities of Federal agencies to ensure adequate protection of the safety and health of operators of commercial motor vehicles. The Secretary is also directed to attempt to minimize paperwork and other burdens.

Section 221—Relationship to Other Law

This section provides that, except as provided in section 206(b), the provisions of this title and the regulations issued under this title do not affect any provision of the Hazardous Materials Transportation Act or any regulation issued by the Secretary under that Act. Section 206(b) precludes the Secretary from eliminating or modifying any existing motor carrier safety rule pertaining exclusively to hazardous materials unless and until an equivalent or more stringent regulation has been promulgated under the HMTA.

Section 222—Amendment to the Motor Carrier Act of 1980

This section amends section 30 of the Motor Carrier Act of 1980 to authorize the Secretary to reduce the minimum insurance requirements for farm vehicles transporting hazardous materials in interstate commerce, other than in bulk, if the Secretary finds that such reduction will not adversely affect public safety. A "farm vehicle" is defined as a vehicle which is designed or adapted and used exclusively for agricultural purposes, is operated by a motor private carrier, and is only incidentally operated on highways.

Section 223—Splash and Spray Suppressant Devices

This section amends section 414 of the Surface Transporation Assistance Act of 1982, which required DOT to establish minimum standards with respect to the performance and installation of splash and spray suppression devices for use on truck tractors, semi-trailers, or trailers. Section 223 changes the effective dates of the splash and spray suppressant devices requirement of the STAA to: (1) for new truck tractors, semi-trailers, and trailers operated on Interstate highways, one year after the date on which the standards are established by DOT; and (2) for all truck tractors, semi-trailer and trailers operated on Interstate highways, four years after the date on which the standards are established by

51-059 O-86-12 (Pt. 1)

DOT. The original provision contained effective dates of two years and five years after the date of enactment of the STAA, respectively. DOT to date, however, has not yet issued these standards.

Section 224—Foreign Bus Carrier Financial Responsibility Requirements

This section amends section 18 of the Bus Regulatory Reform Act of 1982 to require bus companies domiciled in Canada or Mexico which provide service in this country to have evidence of meeting the minimum financial responsibility requirements applicable to U.S. carriers in the motor vehicle at any time the carrier is providing transportation in the U.S. The Secretary of Transportation and the Secretary of the Treasury shall deny entry into the United States of any motor vehicle in which there is no evidence of financial responsibility.

Section 225—Extension of Moratorium on Certification of Foreign Motor Carriers

This section amends section 10922 of title 49, United States Code, to extend the moratorium on entry into the U.S. by Mexican trucking and bus companies until September 19, 1986 (because Mexico substantially prohibits grants of authority to U.S. carriers to provide transportation in Mexico). This section also authorizes the President to impose the moratorium on Canada, if necessary.

Section 226—Certificates of Registration for Foreign Motor Carriers

This section adds a new section 10530 to title 49, United States Code. This section provides that no foreign motor carrier (i.e., a carrier which does not hold ICC common or contract carrier authority and is not domiciled in the U.S.) may provide interstate transportation of exempt items and no foreign motor private carrier may provide interstate transportation of properity unless the Commission has issued to the carrier a certificate of registration authorizing the carrier to provide such transportation in each registrable year (i.e., the 6 month period beginning July 1, 1985, and ending December 31, 1985, calendar year 1986, and each calendar year thereafter). The ICC shall issue such a registration certificate if: (1) it finds that the carrier is fit, willing, and able to provide the transportation to be authorized (i.e., show safety fitness and proof of insurance) and to comply with this subtitle and regulations of the Commission; and (2) the carrier demonstrates to the satisfaction of the ICC that the carrier has paid or will pay in a timely manner, all taxes imposed by the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 on any motor vehicle when such carrier operated in the U.S. in the most recent taxable period ending before the first day of that registrable year. A foreign motor carrier and a foreign private motor carrier must file an application with the ICC for a certificate of registration under this section to provide interstate transportation. Any motor vehicle which is used to provide transportation under a certificate of registration issued under this section must have a copy of the certificate in the vehicle at any time the vehicle is being used to provide such transportation.

The ICC, the Secretary of Transportation, and the Secretary of the Treasury shall deny entry into the United States of any motor vehicle in which there is not a copy of the certificate of registration.

The President may waive the requirements of this section with respect to any contiguous foreign country if the President determines that such waiver is in the national interest and notifies the Congress, in writing, of such waiver before the date on which such waiver is to take effect.

This section does not apply to any contiguous foreign country with respect to which a moratorium is not in effect under section 10922 of title 49, U.S. Code, except that the President may make the requirements of this section applicable with respect to such country if the President determines that doing so is in the national interest. The President must notify the Congress, in writing, of the issuance of such order and a copy of such order must be published in the Federal Register at least 30 days before such order takes effect.

While the moratorium is in place, the ICC may issue certificates of registration to motor carriers of property and motor private carriers domiciled in that country or controlled by persons of that country. Such certificate may only authorize the carrier to provide transportation of exempt items and, in the case of private carriers, property in a municipality in the U.S. which is adjacent to the foreign country or political subdivision.

The amendments made by this section shall take effect May 1, 1985, except that the ICC may issue before that date such regulations as may be necessary to carry out the amendments made by this section.

Section 227—Technical Amendments

This section makes various technical changes necessitated by provisions of this Act.

Section 228—Employee Protection

This section amends part A of title IV of the Surface Transportation Assistance Act of 1982 to include bus company employees under the employee protection provisions of that Act, effective two years after the date of enactment of this Act.

This section also requires the Secretary, in consultation with the Secretary of Labor, to conduct a study to determine whether or not part A of title IV of the Surface Transportation Assistance Act of 1982 should be amended to provide protection to individuals employed by a bus company. The Secretary shall transmit to Congress a report on the results of this study within 12 months after the date of enactment of this Act.

Section 229—Limitation on Authority

This section provides that nothing in this title confers authority on the Secretary to: (1) establish Federal traffic safety regulations, or (2) preempt State traffic regulations, except to the extent that such regulations were included under parts 390 to 399 of title 49 of the Code of Federal Regulations on the date of enactment of this Act. The Secretary also may not regulate the manufacture of commercial motor vehicles.

Section 230—Oversight

This section requires the appropriate Congressional authorizing committees to conduct periodic oversight hearings on the effects of this title no less often than annually for the first five years following the date of enactment of this Act. These hearings are to ensure that this Act is being implemented according to Congressional intent and the purposes of this title.●

IN TRIBUTE AND REMEMBRANCE OF "DADDY KING"—1899-1984

● Mr. HART. Mr. President, on Sunday, November 11, 1984, with the death of the Reverend Martin Luther King, Sr., America lost one of its most profound and creative thinkers. "Daddy King" was a voice of sanity and reason in the midst of a world often caught up in turmoil and chaos. This Nation, and the world, are diminished by his loss.

Daddy King was one of those rare spirits that God sends us but once a generation. After God made him, he threw away the mold. We shall hardly be blessed with his likes again.

Mr. President, Daddy King's unselfish contributions to his church, his city, his Nation, and the world were numerous and significant. He produced and inspired his namesake son—a 20th century prophet and the peaceful warrior who forced America to confront and deal with our racial hypocrisy. But the meaning and importance of the life of Martin Luther King, Sr., was far greater than that.

In an age in which it was not only philosophically revolutionary—but physically dangerous as well—for a black man to demand the simple respect of being addressed as "sir" and not as "boy"; when it was uncommon for black children to attend more than 3 months of school per year; when discrimination and segregation were sanctioned by law and enforced by mob violence; and when the political aspirations of black people were frustrated, ignored, and denied, Daddy King was, above all else, a man.

And therefore, it was no mere coincidence of history that, years later, the protest signs of marchers led by his son often carried the powerful political message: "I Am a Man".

Daddy King was strong, tall, and proud. His walk showed it. His rich baritone voice boomed it. He inspired his flock to achieve beyond the limitations imposed by a racist society. And as he himself said so often, he never stooped low enough to hate anybody.

Rev. Jesse Jackson said, in eulogizing him:

> . . .When he stood, he was the message . . . When he stood, a man stood who once picked cotton but then picked Presidents . . . When he spoke, he spoke not as one with a political mandate, but one with moral authority.

Before black people in Atlanta had access to city hall—much less occupied it—Daddy King was a voice for the voiceless. He made a way out of no way and represented hope in hopeless times. He led, taught, and fought by example, and the world is a better place in which to live because of his life.

In the last few years of the 20th century, as this country grapples with the challenge of doing right by those whom Jesus called "the least of these," the wise and patient counsel of Martin Luther King, Sr., will be missed.

I am thankful that he leaves us as a small part of his rich legacy, a generation of political, social and religious leadership tutored by his magnificent example, and determined not to be turned around.

Surely, he will rest in peace. He earned it.

Mr. President, Ron Sailor, an Atlanta television commentator, broadcast an eloquent, moving tribute to Daddy King on the day following his death. I am pleased to have the opportunity to submit it in full, for the benefit and consideration of my colleagues, and I ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

The article follows:

COMMENTARY ON THE LIFE OF MARTIN LUTHER KING, SR.

(By Ron Sailor, WSB-TV, Atlanta, GA)

Someone asked today, not cynically but with sincerity, "What, if anything, was so great about Martin Luther King, Sr.? What did he do other than help give the world the genius and courage of Martin Luther King, Jr.?" I think it is a fair question, that we will either answer now, or some future generation not bound by loyalty or kind affection will answer for us.

King, Sr. was—there is no better word for it—man. A man during a time of history when it was difficult and dangerous for a black man to aspire even to the bottom rungs of manhood. When to talk publicly about secret dreams of mundane things—casting a vote, sleeping at a roadside hotel or eating lunch downtown at the old Woolworth's lunch counter could get you arrested, beaten or worse.

But King characterized that generation of strong men who somehow forced their way to intelligence, to social prominence, to position, and to power. He was, to most who knew him, a model, a blueprint. A blueprint not perfected, but created painfully along that long walk that carried him from the dusty and sometimes dangerous roads of Henry County in the early 1990's to the White House and beyond in the 1980's.

A few months ago, he called to offer me unsolicited advice about many things in general and the need to struggle with life and never quit in particular. "Son," he told me, "challenge for this Nation is in front of us, not behind. We've got to produce a new group of forward-looking young men with strong minds and tender hearts and the capacity to love everybody."

Dad knew well that kind of man. He was one of them.

No—not great by association with Martin Luther King, Jr., but because he challenged Martin to be Martin and others to be the best they could be.

That is why thousands call him "Dad" and mean it.

With a comment, I'm Ron Sailor.●

ALICE PAUL'S 100TH BIRTHDAY

● Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, January 11, 1985, marks the 100th anniversary of the birth of a remarkable woman, Alice Paul. She died a few years ago, after a long and active life fighting for women's rights.

My interest in Alice Paul stems from two sources. Her cause, equal rights for women, remains a vital public issue, and one which I support. And, Alice Paul was born and raised, and eventually died, in my own State of New Jersey, in Moorestown.

Schooled in the militant tactics of the British suffragette movement led by Emmeline and Christabel Pankhurst, Alice Paul was a relentless fighter for the right to vote for women in this country. When her efforts became too radical for the mainline National American Woman Suffrage Association, she formed her own National Woman's Party. The party grew to 50,000 members and was an important factor in the passage of the 19th amendment, in 1920, granting women the right to vote. The location of the headquarters of the National Woman's Party, Alice Paul's party, so close to the Halls of Congress is a fitting reminder of the struggle for equality for women.

Alice Paul believed that suffrage for women was only the first step to full equality under the law. In 1923 she and the National Woman's Party began pushing for an equal rights amendment to the Constitution. Before she died, Alice Paul saw her proposal approved by Congress and sent to the States for ratification. Unfortunately, the ratification effort fell short. With Alice Paul's dogged spirit as an inspiration, interest in equality for women continues.

The story of Alice Paul's life is one of single-minded devotion to a cause. She was jailed at least seven times, and had to be force fed on more than one occasion. Her first major effort on behalf of women's rights in this country was the organization of a protest march in Washington the day before Woodrow Wilson's first inauguration. Even during the First World War, Alice kept up the pressure for her cause, despite criticism that her activities were unpatriotic.

Once the voting right was secured, Alice Paul went to law school. She said that "equality needs legal training. I decided that if you didn't know law, someone could talk you down." She continued her fight, focusing on the need for an equal rights amendment to the Constitution. She never stopped working for this cause. The modern women's movement, which grew during the 1960's, turned to the same cause. Into her nineties, Alice Paul followed the progress of the equal rights amendment ratification struggle.

An article in Life magazine in 1976 summed up Allice Paul's life this way:

What she has been, though, and what she is at this moment, is the embodiment of the revolutionary's narrow intensity and burning energy for "the cause." Her life has been a vessel into which the necessity of women's rights has been poured. She is the cause ifself. And if Alice Paul had not lived, and been exactly what she is, we, the women of America, would not be today exactly what we are.

Mr. President, Alice Paul was an important daughter of New Jersey. We are proud to remember her on her 100th birthday.●

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Thursday, January 3, 1985

This being the day fixed by the 20th amendment of the Constitution for the annual meeting of the Congress of the United States, the Members-elect of the 99th Congress met in their Hall, and at 12 o'clock noon, were called to order by the Clerk of the House of Representatives, Hon. Benjamin J. Guthrie.

The Chaplain, Rev. James David Ford, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Gracious God, we are conscious of how You have blessed us as individuals and how Your providence has enriched the ways of our Nation. We are grateful for the opportunities we are given this day to use our abilities to serve people in our land and to contribute to the welfare of the peoples of the world. We acknowledge, O God, our weaknesses, yet we pray for vision to do the work that brings justice to every person and hope to the afflicted and needy. Encourage us to be peacemakers to the troubled and anxious and help us see how our might may be used to ease the dangers of conflict and overcome suspicion and envy. Bless the Members of this assembly and may Your benediction be upon them and their families. Keep them always in Your grace, and may we, in all we do, seek justice, love, mercy, and ever walk humbly with You. In Your name we pray. Amen.

The CLERK. Representatives-elect to the 99th Congress, this being the day fixed by the 20th amendment of the Constitution for the meeting of the 99th Congress, the Clerk of the House has prepared the official roll of the Representatives-elect.

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—3

Hall, Ralph	Michel	O'Neill

The CLERK. The tellers agree in their tallies that the total number of votes cast is 425, of which the Honorable THOMAS P. O'NEILL, JR., of Massachusetts, has received 247, and the Honorable ROBERT H. MICHEL, of Illinois, has received 175, with 3 voting "present."

Therefore, Hon. THOMAS P. O'NEILL, JR., of Massachusetts is duly elected Speaker of the House of Representatives for the 99th Congress, having received a majority of the votes cast.

The Clerk appoints the following committee to escort the Speaker-elect to the chair: The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MICHEL]; the gentleman from Texas [Mr. WRIGHT]; the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. LOTT]; the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. GEPHARDT]; the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BOLAND]; and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE].

The committee will retire from the Chamber to escort the Speaker-elect to the chair.

□ 1320

The Doorkeeper announced the Speaker-elect of the House of Representatives of the 99th Congress, who was escorted to the chair by the committee of escort.

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, my colleagues, and guests of the House, it has been traditional, with a few notable exceptions, since the founding of this institution, for the vanquished to present to the House the victor. I consider it a very high privilege to continue in that tradition. But before doing so, Mr. Speaker, may I make a few observations of my own.

First, may I express my profound thanks and appreciation to our Republican Conference for again honoring me and my family with their nomination for Speaker of the House of Representatives. Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, as your Presidential nominee well knows, it is one thing to be nominated; it is another thing to get elected. Obviously in this race I was overwhelmed again by the numbers.

Since this is the only time that I shall be in this lofty position during this Congress, with the possible exception of the day we adjourn this Congress, let me say at the very outset how pleased I am to see those 33 bright, new Republican faces out there. Then let me also say to my Democratic colleagues that I am fully cognizant of the fact that there are 71 more of you than there are of us. [Applause.]

Now, hearing that applause, I would urge the Members of the majority not to run roughshod over the minority. I think that we have demonstrated in the past that as much as we dislike being fewer in number, we can be a very constructive force in this House of Representatives.

You know, it might be well for all of us to keep in mind that there were nearly 73 million people who cast their votes for Members of this body in contested elections around the country. Of that total, there were only 40,000 more Democratic votes cast than Republican votes which suggests a much more evenly divided American sentiment out there than is actually represented here by the numbers.

In this Congress, like all the others, there will be times of serious confrontation, and that is as it should be in a truly deliberative body where differences of opinion on the issues are expected to be thrashed out on their merits. There will also be times of compromise, for ultimately there has to be a coming together and a meeting of minds to craft legislation that will eventually pass both Houses of the Congress.

We of the minority party welcome the opportunity to help move the process along, and would urge you, Mr. Speaker, as the Presiding Officer of this distinguished body, to do everything you can during this Congress to make it happen. Since you have said publicly that this is to be your last term serving in this body, it would be a fitting cap to you career to have the House complete its work at the end of this Congress with accolades and showers of praise.

You have it within your power, Mr. Speaker, to bring it about. We on the Republican side of the aisle pledge our efforts to do likewise.

Finally, and on a more personal note, may I congratulate you again on winning all three of your contests against your good friend BOB MICHEL. If only we could have waged this contest out there on the golf course, I think I could have made it.

Ladies and gentlemen of the House, I have the signal honor of presenting to you the Speaker of the House for the 99th Congress, Hon. THOMAS P. O'NEILL of the great Commonwealth of Massachusetts. [Applause, the Members rising.]

Mr. O'NEILL. My fellow Members, their families, friends and guests, and particularly my close personal friend, BOB MICHEL, whom it is very wise of the Republican Party to present as their leader such and able and talented and well-respected individual. BOB and I get along, except, of course, in philosophical manner in which we do not always agree or very seldom agree. You have presented to this body a worthy man as your candidate for the speakership.

There is no question that BOB gives me about 8 or 10 strokes on the golf course, but the interesting thing is that oftentimes his statistics get a little shady or he interprets them wrong. That is quite all right, BOB. We figure that we won about 53 percent of the vote; I do not know where you get your totals from to be perfectly honest.

I am deeply honored to be elected as the Speaker of the House for the fifth time. At the conclusion of this session, other than Mr. Rayburn, I believe I will have served longer as Speaker than any other individual, and longer in succession. In a period of 10 years, Mr. Rayburn had two interruptions.

In the gallery today is my wife Millie and some of my family; daughters and sons and some of my grandchildren. I owe so much to Millie and to the family through the years for their faithful support in my lifetime of politics. [Applause.]

Last November my constituents in the Eighth District of Massachusetts chose me to represent them for the 17th time and I want to thank them for the trust that they have placed in me.

The Congress of the United States is the greatest legislature in the greatest Nation on Earth. The office of Speaker is the highest legislative office in our country. To serve as Speaker is a very special honor which carries with it solemn responsibilities. Today, I promise you that I will wield this gavel fairly, firmly, and with responsibility, always respecting the rules and the precedents of the House.

Once again, Congress is convening its two Houses, controlled by two political parties. The Founding Fathers set up a system of checks and balances that makes passing laws a very difficult process under the best of circumstances, and even more difficult when control of Congress is divided between the parties. Before 1981, when these things occurred, this partisan division promoted legislative inaction and stalemate. This has not been the case for most issues considered during the 97th and 98th Congresses. There were many legislative fights, but there was almost always a decisive outcome.

Consequently, I will continue to do all I can to expedite the Nation's business in this House for the next 2 years. Because the Members of this House are elected every 2 years, we put a premium on action and results. We expect conflict, but I hope we will reject any obstructionism.

I am prepared to work with the leadership of the other body, the President of the United States and BOB MICHEL and the Republican Members of this House to try to reduce the deficit, to reduce the unemployment rate, and to reduce the threat of a nuclear war. As we meet today, there are many ambitious proposals to change the way we raise revenue for the Federal Government, as well as to reduce the deficit. These proposals, I promise you, will receive a full and fair hearing in this House. It is clear that something must be done to restore confidence in the fairness of our tax system. In addition, American confidence about the future is being sorely tried by an annual $200 billion budget deficit. We ran a bigger deficit 1 month last fall than we did during the entire year of 1979. These deficits, as we know, will not take care of themselves. It is up to the President and the Congress to act upon them and to take care of them.

No doubt the public will judge the success of this Congress by our willingness to make the tough decisions to get our fiscal house in order. The latest economic figures seem to indicate that the recovery is continuing, and that is good and welcome news, but these times are tough for the farmers and the minorities and many blue-collar workers. Many banks are overextended and our businessmen are fighting a floodtide of foreign imports.

In the case of our farmers, our direct involvement is inevitable, because we have to reauthorize during this Congress the farm bill.

In the case of the poor and the unemployed, our role is a matter of choice. I want them to know that here in the House we will try to do all we can to ease their burdens and reduce their numbers over the next 2 years. The poor in this country, in my opinion, have already paid their share to reduce the budget. It is time we did our share to give them something to live for. That is a real problem we have here, giving the poor something to live for.

We begin this session of the new Congress with a renewed sense of hope that the upcoming discussions with the Soviet Union will lead to an arms control agreement which reduces the risk of nuclear conflict and take us a step back from the abyss of nuclear holocaust. I want to make it clear that as Speaker I welcome these discussions and am prepared to be as helpful as I can to the President of the United States and to the Secretary of State in their quest for an arms control agreement.

We begin our new term today and the President will be in his new term in about 2 weeks from today. Let me say that my party in the House and I want to work with him in meeting the great challenges that face this Nation. Of course, there will be disagreements. There always are in our two-party system, but we all have a common love for this country and a respect for democracy.

The Founding Fathers referred to the House during their deliberations as the "First Branch." They did so because it gave the people a direct share in the Government by beginning anew every 2 years. And so it is today we begin anew, and I hope that our actions will prove the correctness of Thomas Jefferson's observation that "our Government is founded not on the fears and follies of man, but in his reason."

Finally, I hope that most of all what we do here in this House over the next 2 years will result in increasing the respect and the appreciation of our constituents for this Congress and our role in Government.

I want to thank my Democratic colleagues. Five times they have put my name in nomination. To them I owe a deep debt of thanks, and may I, from the bottom of a deeply grateful heart, say thank you to my Democratic colleagues for the honor that they have given me.

May I thank the Members of the House for the respect with which they have always treated this role as the speakership of the House.

In conclusion, may I say, with God's aid and God's might, may we pray to Him that he will give to us the reason, the judgment, the knowledge, the talent that He has given to this body all through the years that has been part and parcel of making our Nation the greatest nation in the world. Thank you all.

[Applause, Members rising.]

Mr. O'NEILL. I am now ready to take the oath of office, and as is the custom, I am delighted to see that the dean of the House is in the well and is ready to administer the oath.

Mr. WHITTEN then administered the oath of office to Mr. O'NEILL of Massachusetts.

[Applause, the Members rising.]

The SPEAKER. I appreciate that in accordance with precedent, and custom, the minority leader, the Republican leader, as you know, presented the Speaker-elect and opened the session.

I want to make this presentation to BOB.

BOB, this is the gavel with which you opened this session and we want you to have it for your mementos. We always hope, of course, BOB, that in 2 years you will be in exactly the same position that you are in today.

SWEARING IN OF MEMBERS

The SPEAKER. According to the precedents, the Chair will swear in all Members of the House at this time.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas [Mr. WRIGHT].

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, upon my responsibility as a Member-elect of the 99th Congress, I object to the oath being administered to the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. McIntyre, and I base this upon facts and statements which I consider to be reliable.

The SPEAKER. Are there any other Members-elect who wish to offer a challenge?

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MYERS].

Mr. MYERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, upon my responsibility as a Member-elect of the 99th Congress, I object to the oath of office being administered to the gentleman from Idaho, Mr. RICHARD STALLINGS. I base this upon statements and information which I deem reliable.

The SPEAKER. Are there any other Members-elect to be challenged?

The Members-elect that have been challenged will be seated. The remaining Members will take the oath of office.

The Members-elect and Delegates-elect and the Resident Commissioner-elect rose, and the Speaker administered the oath of office to them.

The SPEAKER. Congratulations. The gentlemen and gentlewomen are now Members of the 99th Congress of the United States.

REFERRING ELECTION OF A MEMBER FROM THE EIGHTH CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT OF INDIANA TO THE COMMITTEE ON HOUSE ADMINISTRATION

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I have a privileged resolution at the Clerk's desk, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 1

Resolved, That the question of the right of Frank McCloskey or Richard McIntyre to a seat in the Ninety-ninth Congress from the Eighth Congressional District of Indiana shall be referred to the Committee on House Administration, when elected, and neither Frank McCloskey nor Richard McIntyre shall be sworn until the Committee on House Administration reports upon and the House decides such question. For each day during the period beginning on the date on which this resolution is agreed to and ending on the day before the date on which the House decides such question, Frank McCloskey and Richard McIntyre shall each be paid an amount equal to the daily equivalent of the annual rate of basic pay payable to a Member of the House. For the period beginning on the date on which this resolution is agreed to and ending on the date on which the House decides such question, the Clerk of the House shall provide for clerical assistants in the manner provided by law for the case of death or resignation of a Member and shall otherwise perform full administrative functions with respect to the Eighth Congressional District of Indiana. There shall be paid from the contingent fund of the House such sums as may be necessary to carry out this resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. WRIGHT], under the precedents, is recognized for 1 hour

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I shall yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL], and pending that, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Texas yield for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. WRIGHT. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania for a parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. GEKAS. I simply would ask the Speaker of the House to pose the question that is before the House precisely so that we know about what the debate to ensue is concerned.

Mr. WRIGHT. I will be glad to explain, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The answer to the point of parliamentary inquiry is the gentleman from Texas [Mr. WRIGHT] has offered in the House a resolution which the Clerk has read. That is what the House is debating, and that is what we will vote on.

Mr. GEKAS. Then, Mr. Speaker, I simply would ask the gentleman to repeat at the outset the body of the resolution which he has presented.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. WRIGHT] is recognized.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I will be happy to explain the resolution.

This is a very simple resolution which follows precedents previously established in the House in situations which are similar. This resolves the question in regard to the disputed election in the Eighth Congressional District of Indiana in the same manner in which previous disputes of a similar and, in fact, almost identical nature have been resolved in the House.

The resolution provides that the question of the right of Frank McCloskey or Richard McIntyre to a seat in the 99th Congress shall be referred to the Committee on House Administration, and that neither Frank McCloskey nor Richard McIntyre shall be sworn until the Committee on House Administration reports upon, and the House decides, the question of which is truly and duly elected.

This House, Mr. Speaker, has been invested by the Constitution with the responsibility to judge the qualifications, returns, and elections of its Members. That responsibility the House always has taken very seriously. To prevent election disputes from degenerating into partisan confrontations, the House has created a general presumption in favor of the candidate who is certified by the appropriate State election official as a Member-elect. That certification carries with it the presumption that the State election procedures have been timely, regular, and fairly implemented.

The House will reject a certification only under the most exceptional circumstances, where the very ability of the State election procedures to determine the outcome accurately is put into serious, question. Regrettably the election in the Eighth Congressional District of Indiana falls into this most narrow of exceptions.

The election procedures employed in the Eighth Congressional District have been neither timely nor regular, and serious questions have been raised with respect to their fairness. As of today, the recount provided for by State law is far from complete. Major changes in the election totals occur almost daily. The outcome of the race has changed as different counties have concluded their recounts. The results from the counties which have certified new recount totals would give Mr. McCloskey a lead of some 47 votes at this particular moment, and that, of course, differs from the results upon which the secretary of state based his certification to the House. His certification reflects only the totals from the first county of the multicounty district which completed its recount.

The State procedures have consequently failed to produce a timely resolution of the election on which the House can confidently rely in discharging our constitutional responsibility.

Neither has the State procedure been regular in its application; 15 separate counties are participating in the recount. Each such county is operating under its own set of rules. As a consequence, ballots bearing identical minor flaws are counted or not counted, depending upon the individual county involved. There is no uniformity of rule or application. Literally hundreds of votes already have been disallowed.

The technical requirements for counting votes in Indiana are so complex and so confusing that the recount underway has not to date produced a result on which the House can rely. Discrepancies in vote totals from election night and during the recount make it absolutely impossible at this stage to determine with certitude who is the duly elected Member from the Eighth Congressional District of Indiana. Seating one candidate or another would be based on mere speculation.

Questions have been raised additionally about the extent to which the certification and recount procedures may have been subject to partisan pressures, and this puts into question the impartiality and the fairness of the process. The combination of these factors renders the House at this time unable to judge the election in a manner commensurate with its constitutional responsibility to the people of the Eighth Congressional District of Indiana. The election procedures to date have simply not yielded a result on which the House can judge.

A very similar, in fact almost identical situation confronted the House in 1961 in a contest between Mr. Roush and Mr. Chambers.

Ironically, that case arose also in the State of Indiana. In that instance, which forms the closest on-point precedent to the present situation, Mr. Chambers was certified by the secretary of state as having been elected based upon a unilateral determination of error on the part of the secretary of state. In that instance the House asked both candidates to stand aside, as this resolution would ask today.

In that prior instance the complete investigation and recount revealed that the secretary of state was in error and that Mr. Roush had been duly and truly elected.

And so, Mr. Speaker, in keeping with the solemn constitutional responsibility of the House and pursuant to the best precedent available to us, I find it most unfortunate that we are resorting to this extraordinary measure, but I find it to be the only fair and honorable procedure available to us.

Let me assure my colleagues, and more importantly assure the voters of the Eighth Congressional District of Indiana, that this matter will be resolved fairly and openly, and I hope, trust, and intend that it shall be resolved expeditiously.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2½ minutes to the distinguished minority leader, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MICHEL].

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, I think a grave injustice is being done here today to one of our colleagues on our side of the aisle, who in my judgment should have been sworn in today as an active Member of the House of Representatives.

I would hope that the Members of the House Administration Committee who will follow me will in more detailed fashion make their cases, just as I would hope that the gentleman himself who has been so aggrieved will have an opportunity to speak in his own behalf.

But, as I see this thing in capsule form, on November 6, 1984, Richard D. McIntyre was duly elected to sit in the U.S. House of Representatives from the Eighth District of Indiana, just as was the case with the entire Indiana delegation. Mr. McIntyre received a certificate of election from the secretary of that State. His certificate of election was duly executed. The delay was due only to the correction of an arithmetical error, not to a recount.

It was delivered to and accepted by the Clerk of the House. The Clerk of the House has issued Mr. McIntyre the appropriate instruments of his office as a Member-elect. He has been listed in the new book as a Member of the 99th Congress.

Now there is a recount and litigation going on in Indiana over this election but both State and Federal law provide a reasoned and orderly method to resolve the validity of this election.

Mr. Mcintyre has recourse to the statute, that is to United States Code 381, the Federal Contested Election Act, just as do any other disappointed candidates.

It would be a terrible mistake, in my judgment, to deny any Member-elect a seat just because there is an ongoing dispute over the closeness of the election. Here we have a mathematical problem, not a legal problem. All we need to know is who had the most votes, and the Indiana judicial system and the House Administration Committee are equipped to determine that question.

□ 1400

To do anything short of seating Mr. McIntyre, in effect disenfranchises 500,000 Indiana citizens for an indefinite period of time.

They would have no voice, no voice, and without good cause.

One final point: The shadow of the Supreme Court case of Powell versus McCormack rests in this Chamber today. Some of us recall how the House excluded Representative-elect Powell from the 90th Congress. He had a certificate of election. Let us remember that the bottom line of that decision was "In judging the qualification of its Members under Article I, section 5, the Congress is limited to the standing qualifications expressly prescribed by the Constitution." And that is, as I recall from my grade school history, being 25 years of age, a citizen of the United States for 7 years, an inhabitant of the State from which one is elected, and holding a certificate of election from one's secretary of State. That is all that it says.

And we were in error some time ago when we denied a Member a seat because we did not adhere to those four basic principles and you are going to do the same thing here today if you do not vote down the gentleman from Texas' resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. McIntyre.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not have the right to participate in debate unless the House agrees. If there is an objection from the House, the gentleman may not speak.

Without objection, the gentleman is entitled to 5 minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. McINTYRE. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, and Members of the House, I did not expect my maiden speech to the House to be like this and I wish that it was not. But I do appreciate the opportunity.

As you know from the testimony here today we had a very close election in Indiana. I was certified the winner by 34 votes.

Since that time, the recount process has been under way; it continues. I believe 9 counties of the 15 are complete. I think five are partially complete.

Based on the 9 completed counties, I think the figures are that we have a 53-vote lead. As of Friday night, the last time that I was aware of the counting, based on the uncompleted countings we had a 406-vote lead.

As I say, I wish it had not been a close election. I would have loved to come here with a huge mandate.

But nevertheless I did run for Congress, I did run according to the laws of the United States and of the State of Indiana and I was elected and certified by 34 votes.

I think that I will survive this motion today whatever happens because I think that the facts are with us.

I think the law is with us. But I think it would be tragic to disenfranchise a half million people in southern Indiana because this was a close election.

So I ask you today, before you cast your vote, to think about what your position would be had you had a close election.

I ask you to think about what is, as far as I can tell, 196 years of history of this body where a duly certified Member has never failed to be sworn in.

I ask you to think about the half million people in Indiana's Eighth District and I ask you to think about the precedents that you will set for the future and about the possible blow to the integrity of this body that could be struck by what you do here today.

Mr. Speaker, thank you very much.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from California [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. THOMAS of California. Mr. Speaker, you talked today about this institution. The gentleman from Indiana whom we are discussing today talked about this institution, its integrity. I want to spend just 1 minute or 2 talking about this institution and its integrity.

Since 1933 we have 82 contested elections. And in 81 of those contested elections, we have sworn in the Member-elect who was certified by the appropriate State official. Only once in those 82 times have we not.

So I would submit to you today that what is being asked of you is extraordinary, highly unusual. That one case was Roush versus Chambers and coincidentally it occured in Indiana in 1960.

But the facts of the Roush versus Chambers case are vastly different than the case you have today.

First of all, as was indicated by the majority leader, there was a question of the certification. There is no question now that the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. McIntyre, is certified by the secretary of State. He has not changed his mind as was the case in Roush versus Chambers; he has not sent a transcript saying, "I was in error, let the contestant be sworn in, not certified"; that is not the case here.

There was no provision in Indiana law for a recount in 1960. In fact, one of the things that the House Administration Committee had to do was to set up a procedure to count the votes in the State of Indiana. That is not the case now. Indiana has a series of statutes, very exact and precise for counting votes. In fact that is what they are doing now; they are going through a recount. Many of you have been through those in your own States where you have procedure for recounts.

Indiana has that now; they did not have it then.

In addition there was no Federal Contested Elections Act in 1960; there is now.

It is my understanding that the former representative of the Eighth District in Indiana has not filed a contest under the Federal Contested Elections Act.

So what we have today is a set of facts vastly different than Roush versus Chambers; the only time that we have not sworn in a Member.

And I too want to talk about the time it is going to take for the House Administration Committee to supervise the recount now going on under State law to determine whether or not the certificate that currently has Mr. McIntyre's name on it is in fact proper and appropriate, which we all believe that it is.

But it seems to me that this House has an obligation not to the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. McCloskey, not to the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. McIntyre, but to the people of the Eighth District of Indiana. Let them have representation for the time that it takes the House of Representatives to determine whether or not the recount procedure in Indiana is following Indiana law and is appropriate and proper.

House Administration does not have to set up a structure to count each and every vote and determine how they are going to be counted as was the case in Roush Chambers; that is done under State statute.

It seems to me we do not want to set the precedent that you are being asked to set today, and that is a certified Member-elect, where there is no contest filed under the Federal Contested Elections Act is not allowed to be seated; that in fact it is declared vacant.

Now I think that identifies quite a few Members here. That is, they have been certified and that there is no contest filed against them.

Yes, there is a recount; yes, there is a concern about some of the very precise election procedures required in Indiana. That is being resolved.

But the winner of the election as certified by the State of Indiana is Mr. McIntyre.

We ought to swear him in and let House Administration work its will, oversee the election procedures in Indiana, because if we do not, if he is denied his seat, then any certified candidate against them is open to political attack.

I do not think we want that. I think what we want to do is handle this case as we have handled the 81 other cases and that is: There is a question, but let us give those people in the Eighth District of Indiana the opportunity for representation until that question is completely settled.

□ 1410

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished ranking Republican member, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MYERS].

Mr. MYERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague, Mr. FRENZEL, for yielding to me.

We all regret this posture we find ourselves in. It is regrettable that the people of the Eight District of Indiana were not more decisive on November 6. I am sure both Mr. McIntyre, Member-elect, and the incumbent, Mr. McCloskey share that concern, but this is not the first time nor I guess will be the last time that we will find ourselves in this position.

As has already been said, there have been a number of times historically that the House has found itself with a recount pending at the time it became appropriate for the Members to be sworn in. With one exception, every time when a Member was properly certified by the elected officials in the State that they were elected from, this House swore those Members in, sometimes without prejudice, but they were sworn in because they had been duly certified by that, but notwithstanding the possibility of a recount in the future.

One exception in the history of this House that I have been able to find when that was not abided, and that sent a confusing signal unfortunately also from Indiana in the 1960 election where both Mr. Chambers and Mr. Roush carried to this House certifications from the secretary, State of Indiana because of an error in tabulation. Both had certifications that they had been duly elected.

The House was confused, and properly so, probably, decided not to seat either, but gave them rights of office and so forth. So this is not the first time that this has happened, and I guess it will not be the last time.

The question today is interpretation of our Constitution. What power this body has in seating its duly elected Members. The certificate that Richard McIntyre has is exactly the same as the rest of us from Indiana have; and similar in form that every other Member has that has been sworn in here.

The Clerk of the House a moment ago said, every Member's name he called has been properly certified in proper form to him. Richard McIntyre's name was read when the Clerk made that certification. He has been asked to stand aside at this time, and no one objects to this procedure. But the next procedure should be to swear him in.

Now, the framers of our Constitution, back in 1787 anticipated that something like this would happen. And they debated just what powers should the Congress have in deciding the qualifications of its Members. It was thought that maybe a Member of Congress should own property. Other considerations were made about the qualifications of a Member-elect; whether we should seat that Member or not.

James Madison most appropriately said, and I quote from the Constitution papers:

> An improper and dangerous power in the legislature, the qualifications of electors and elected were fundamental articles in a Republican Government and ought to be fixed by the Constitution. If the Legislature could regulate those of either, it can by degrees subvert the Constitution . . . Qualifications founded on artificial distinctions may be devised by the stronger, in order to keep out partisans of [a weaker] faction.

Is not that what is happening here today? The stronger keeping out the weaker on an artificial distinction?

Powell McCormack was cited by our minority leader a moment ago. Many of us were here when Adam Clayton Powell was refused a seat. And Adam Clayton Powell went to court. The Supreme Court decided in favor of Powell.

The Supreme Court held, and I say:

> Significantly, Madison's argument was not aimed at the imposition of a property qualification as such, but rather at the delegation to the Congress of the discretionary power to establish any qualifications.

The Court went on, and it said when Powell argued that:

> The Constitution provides that an elected Representative may be denied his seat only if the House finds he does not meet one of the standing qualifications expressly proscribed by the Constitution.

Again, our leader had identified those three conditions. First, age. Must have attained at least the age of 25 by the time they accept the oath here.

Second, be a resident of the State at the time they take the oath here.

And third, have been a resident of the United States for at least 7 years.

The Court held these are the only conditions that we, the House of Representatives, can refuse a duly and properly certified Member-elect. The Supreme Court agreed with Powell and said, the House, and I quote:

The House is without power to exclude any person * * *" I repeat, the Court said: "The House is without authority to exclude any person who meets the requirements for the membership expressly prescribed in the Constitution." This is what we have today.

51-059 O-86-13 (Pt. 1)

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 additional minute to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MYERS].

Mr. MYERS of Indiana. The Supreme Court stated:

> Congress, by the Federal Constitution, are not authorized to prescribe the qualifications of their own members, but are authorized to judge of their qualifications; in doing so, however, they must be governed by the rules prescribed in the Federal Constitution, and by them only.

It goes on. The Federal Contested Elections Act provides not that we need to do this, but merely says no requirement that contest and challenge the seating of a certified Member. It does not preclude Mr. McCloskey, nor would we want to cut off the right of Mr. McCloskey for a recount which is under way right now.

In closing, the Supreme Court again said this: "For these reasons, we have concluded that article I, section 5"—being used here today to exclude, to deny Mr. McIntyre the seat—"at most a 'textually demonstrable commitment' to Congress to judge only the the qualifications expressly set forth in the Constitution."

The Court goes on to say: "The House is without power to exclude any Member-elect who meets the Constitution's requirements for membership."

It does not preclude the recount; we certainly see this. The proper procedure today should be that Mr. McIntyre comes down to the well, is sworn in without prejudice to the pending case. It is the only course of action. If you vote differently, you are denying the Constitution, you are denying the obligation you just took as a Member of this Congress to defend the Constitution of the United States. Do not make that mistake. Give the option to the recount; we can change it if necessary, but at least abide by law and our Constitution.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the dean of the Indiana delegation, the distinguished gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HAMILTON].

Mr. HAMILTON. I thank the majority leader, and I rise in support of his resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the Wright resolution which provides that neither Frank McCloskey, the Democrat, nor Richard McIntyre, the Republican, be seated as Representative of Indiana's Eighth District until the Committee on House Administration inquires into the election and recommends that one or the other take the seat.

The election of Indiana's Eighth District Representative remains undecided—and controversial.

The question before us is one of the highest significance: Which man will represent the people of Indiana's Eighth District in the U.S. House of Representatives?

There are several reasons why the Wright resolution should be adopted. It is the fairest and most reasonable approach to a problem that ought not to be decided on partisan lines.

The election certificate issued by the Indiana secretary of state to Mr. McIntyre, is an invalid document that the House should not recognize. It does not justify the seating of Mr. McIntyre.

The certificate is not based on the original count. It is not based on a district-wide recount. It is not based on all county recounts completed to date. It is based on the recount in a single county, the only one which, in isolation from all the others, would make Mr. McIntyre the winner. The secretary of state's action is like declaring the winner of a football game at half time on the basis of the score at the end of the first quarter.

As of November 13, 1984, the clerks of the 15 Indiana counties making up the Eighth District had certified the election results. The certificates showed Mr. McCloskey leading Mr. McIntyre by 72 votes out of 233,610 cast.

Under Indiana law, Mr. McCloskey should have been certified as the leading candidate, but instead the secretary of state did nothing for more than a month, alleging that a lawsuit filed by McIntyre in Gibson County, IN, would reveal a new outcome in that county and would give the election to Mr. McIntyre.

Recounts soon were underway in all 15 counties of the Eighth District, and the first to certify new results, on December 11, was Gibson, The recount in Gibson, when combined with totals in the other 14 unrecounted counties, gave the election to Mr. McIntyre by 34 votes. The secretary of state got the Gibson certificate 2 days later and had Mr. McIntyre declared the winner in the middle of the night.

New certificates from other counties began arriving in the secretary of state's office. By December 28, seven completed county recounts put Mr. McCloskey back in the lead. Four additional county recounts completed but not yet received in Indianapolis have left Mr. McCloskey in the lead. However, the secretary of state had done nothing and has stated that he will do nothing until all the recounts are completed.

The House ordinarily gives deference to a State's certificate of election because that certificate is assumed to show that the State which issued it believes it to be a valid reflection of the will of the electorate.

Acceptance of Mr. McIntyre's certificate, however, would be to seat him based upon a recount result in only one of 15 counties. That approach cannot be supported by any principle and is indeed wholly irrational.

Thus, Mr. McIntyre's certificate should not be recognized by the House.

Second, the House should adopt the Wright resolution because the district-wide recount has not been completed. As I speak today, recounts in four counties—Monroe, Orange, Posey, and Vanderburgh, the district's largest—are still underway. Legal controversy surrounding the recount in Greene County has led to a second recount there.

Fluctuating official totals have given the race to Mr. McCloskey, then to Mr. McIntyre, then again to Mr. McCloskey.

The plain truth is that the winner of the election is not yet known. Fundamental fairness and common sense require at least that the outcome not be acknowledged before the final tallies are in.

Third and perhaps more basic, the Wright resolution should be adopted because even when the recounts are completed, the manner in which they have been conducted makes it difficult, if not impossible, to discern the winner of such a closely contested race. The reason is lack of uniformity in recount procedures among the various counties. The 15 State recount proceeding in the 15 counties of the district have employed, and continue to employ, different and inconsistent rules in counting ballots. This haphazard process cannot determine the outcome of this election.

Let me describe a few of the inconsistencies, most of which, incidentally, have worked against Mr. McCloskey:

In Vanderburgh County, ballots on which poll clerks failed to write precinct numbers have been rejected. More than 1,000 voters have been disenfranchised, with a net loss of nearly 300 votes for Mr. McCloskey in that county In other counties, such ballots have been counted—to Mr. McIntyre's benefit.

In Daviess, Gibson, Martin, Vanderburgh, and Washington Counties, in-person or nonabsentee ballots without the initials of poll clerks have been rejected. Mr. McCloskey has lost scores of votes in the process, yet in all other counties such ballots have been counted and Mr. McIntyre has gained.

In Warrick County, ballots with handprinted—as opposed to handwritten—initials of poll clerks were rejected at first, with Mr. McCloskey losing some 100 votes. The recount officials than changed their minds and accepted the ballots. The very same midstream change was made in Orange County, but there Mr. McIntyre was the clear beneficiary.

The change of procedures in this last instance is especially troubling, and there are two counties besides

Warrick and Orange where recount procedures have been altered in midstream. In Daviess and Greene Counties, uninitialed absentee ballots were rejected at first but were later accepted when it became clear that Mr. McIntyre was losing votes.

It is apparent that something must be done to address these inconsistencies, or else few people will be satisfied that the man who eventually is seated ought to be the Eighth District's Congressman.

A fourth point in favor of the Wright resolution is that there is precedent for failing to seat either contestant in a deadlocked race such as this one. The most relevant precendent is the Roush-Chambers election, also in Indiana, in 1960. One candidate was certified with a margin of 12 votes, but neither was seated when the House convened. The candidate who was not certified was seated, a winner by 99 votes.

Finally, it may be argued that the House ought to seat the certificated Mr. McIntyre if for no other reason than the need of the Eighth District for representation in Congress. Clearly, we must ask the Committee on House Administration to proceed with all due speed for this very reason.

However, we cannot ignore the fact that we do not know who has won the election. It would be a disservice to residents of the Eighth District to seat the wrong man today only to have him unseated tomorrow.

Also, the resolution provides that the Clerk of the House will render services to Eighth District constituents until the matter is resolved.

Moreover, if either candidate is seated, one side will have every reason to delay the process of resolving the contest. If neither candidate is seated, each side will have every incentive to expedite the process.

Article I, section 5 of the U.S. Constitution says that each "House shall be the Judge of the Elections, Returns and Qualifications of its own Members." The situation is ripe for the House to exercise its authority to review the Eighth District election using uniform procedures for counting ballots.

Accordingly, I urge your support of the Wright resolution.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the distinguished gentleman from California [Mr. HUNTER].

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Speaker, first let me tell both Mr. McIntyre and my friend Mr. McCloskey that I, too, sympathize with their situation. I know that they would rather come under different circumstances to this gathering.

But let me point out that this case, Roush versus Chambers, has been misinterpreted several times. In fact, today is the first time in history that a candidate who the secretary of the state has held out to be duly certified has been denied his seat.

In Roush versus Chambers, after Mr. Chambers was certified the winner, the secretary of state of Indiana offered a sworn statement impeaching the certificate. So the cloud on that certificate in that case was put on it by the secretary of the state of Indiana, not the House of Representatives. After that the secretary of state issued Mr. Roush's certificate and that is when the House of Representatives stepped in. Never before have we taken the action of stepping in and acting in direct contravention to the certificate that was issued by the secretary of a State held that out to be a valid certificate.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Michigan [Mr. VANDER JAGT].

Mr. VANDER JAGT. Mr. Speaker, I had not intended on getting myself involved in this debate today, but I simply cannot sit idly by and remain silent while I see this House apparently about to commit an act of injustice so grievous that it will permeate our deliberations throughout the rest of this 99th Congress and in the pages of history that are written about us.

Never before in history has a duly certified Member-elect been denied seating pending the outcome of a recount. Yes, in 1 case out of the 82—an Indiana case in 1960—two Members were asked to stand aside. But in that case, the secretary of state had certified one person a winner and the Governor somebody else a winner. The House very wisely said, let us have these two certified candidates stand aside while we resolve this controversy.

Never before in history has a candidate certified by the duly constituted authority of that State as a winner been asked to stand aside pending the outcome of an admittedly controversial recount.

The facts in this case are very simple. The arguments that are reached for become complicated and complex. The facts are simple. On election night, McIntyre, on the basis of the county reports of totals, was ahead by 100 votes. The secretary of state of Indiana does not certify for 10 days to give each county an opportunity to correct any errors that were made in the tabulations.

On November 8, Vanderburgh County added errors and McCloskey went ahead temporarily by 72 votes.

On November 9, it was discovered that Green County had reported two precincts two times. When that correction was made under a writ of mandamus by the court, and all of the counties had certified their completed election results to the secretary of state, he did the only thing he could do under Indiana law and that was, certify McIntyre a winner by 34 votes.

In the meantime, both sides had asked for recounts and that recount process to date has expanded McIntyre's lead from 34 to 406 votes.

So the majority reaches for the most ludicrous argument you can reach for in saying that, "Well, at one point in this seesaw battle, McCloskey was ahead, and at that point, the secretary of state should have changed the certification."

That is so ludicrous it means that in every recount as each country comes in day by day, the secretary of state, or whoever it is, changes the certification. It is ludicrous on the face of it.

But factually it is incorrect to assert that McCloskey is ahead on the basis of recounts in completed counties. That total includes Green County, and Green County this afternoon is recounting under a court order. Now how, when they are in the process of recounting, you can claim that that is a completed county is utterly beyond me.

So if you measure it by counties that are completed, McIntyre is a winner. If you measure it by the total recount to date, McIntyre is a winner. If you measure it by election results certified by each county to the secretary of state, McIntyre is a winner. And if you measure it by election results on election night, McIntyre is a winner. And every one of the arguments raised here have been raised in State courts, circuit courts, the Indiana Supreme Court and U.S. Federal district court, and every one of the arguments have been rejected.

Now these rejected arguments are brought here, and we are to reverse those rulings and refuse to seat a Member-elect with a valid certificate of election, for the first time in the history of this body, which I hope we all love so very much. No—the basis on which we are being asked to reverse this process and our Constitution and our historical precedence is raw power.

The old statement that, "If you have got the votes, you can do anything you want to do." That is true, that the majority can do it to Rick McIntyre; it can do it to the minority. But in the process, you have to do it to the Constitution, and you have to do it to 500,000 people of the Eighth District of Indiana who will not have a vote between now and summer, during which we could revise our tax law in the most sweeping changes since the institution of income tax, and we will be making basic decisions about the size and nature and scope of our Federal Government carrying on for decades.

To do this would be to transform Republican charges, that power corrupts but absolute power corrupts absolutely, from charge to fact. This stealing of a seat would create a stench that will permeate our every deliberation.

This goes beyond one vote, and it is a choice that each Member must make between partisanship and justice; between raw power and simple honesty and fair play. I hope, in the name of the integrity of this institution, you vote not just on behalf of Rick McIntyre or on behalf of the 500,000 people in Indiana's, Eighth District but also on behalf of the integrity of this House of Representatives and vote to seat duly certified Rick McIntyre as this House has always done in its history.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 6 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, this has been a close election. Representative-elect McIntyre has described it very accurately. As in all close elections, the candidates are going to exhaust all the legal remedies available to them. Recounts have been ordered and relief has been sought in various courts. Several of those relief measures have been discussed here this afternoon. Relief is still being sought some of it right here in the House of Representatives today.

It is said that truth lies in the eye of the beholder. Unfortunately, partisan beholders seek the truth in differing sorts of facts, precedents, and presumptions.

Probably none of us can be wholly objective about this matter, but that does not mean that we should not try. I must say, on the Republican side we have tried, but it is hard for us to consider this resolution without some real bitterness.

We see here a brand new precedent being set. We came very close to asking the entire House to stand aside from the swearing-in today, in batches large and small. Finally, we decided that would be a facetious symbol of our objection which would not be well received. We decided that representative government was too precious to be triviolized.

So instead we chose to accept the chance to explain, the dangers we see here. What we see is the blatant abuse of power by a ruthless majority unafraid to take away a seat which a Member has earned in an election, albeit close.

Here is where we are: The resolution proposes to rob Member-elect McIntyre of the seat in Indiana's Eighth even though he has been declared the winner and has been duly certified by the Governor of the State. He received more votes than his opponent in the election. Of the recounts that have proceeded in the completed counties, he is ahead by 43 votes. In the partial and completed counties that have been reported, he is ahead by 406 votes.

The lead that the majority leader and the distinguished gentleman from Indiana claim that candidate McCloskey had occurred in Green County, where, on December 28, the judge set aside that count, and ordered the recount commissioners to begin over again.

He is today supposed to be charging the recount commissioners and giving them instructions for that recount. So, at this time, there is no validity to the alleged McCloskey lead, and it is alleged by no one except McCloskey.

There is no evidence nor allegation of any fraud in the vote. The process is simply a matter of the State trying to figure who voted and how to add them up. There has been no contest filed in the House by McCloskey. There is no reason to deny the seat except that the opponent is a nice guy who came close, and who has powerful friends. So the Democrat majority has proposed to steal the seat from the Republican.

There is simply no reason, no precedent, nor any basis to vote yes on the resolution.

Let us talk about the Roush precedent, Mr. Speaker. It has been alleged by the majority leader that they are "similar and almost identical" circumstances. Let us look at the differences.

In the first place, certificates of error were filed by county officials in Roush against Chambers, and in the McIntyre victory, all of the counties are complete and there are no certifications of error. Two counties, Vanderburgh and Gibson, have corrected their tallies. Mr. McCloskey thought it was nifty when Vanderburgh corrected its vote total. He did not think it was so good when Gibson was directed by the Court to correct its final tally giving Mr. McIntyre the victory.

The second difference is there is a transcript by the Secretary of State in the case declaring that Roush, the contestant, was duly elected rather than the certified Member, who had been certified previously. That is quite a difference.

Third, there were findings of fact by a campaign expenditures committee appointed by the Governor about allegations or irregularity and fraud.

Fourth, there was a contest filed in that contest. We have no contest today. McCloskey has made no filings of contest to the House of Representatives.

Fifth, there was no Indiana recount law. Rather there was one, but it has been amended since.

Sixth, there was no Federal Contested Elections Act which the House could use as a guidepost for its judgment.

The question is pretty simple: The Roush precedent is a reed so slender that it cannot bear the weight of a stolen Congressional seat.

Mr. Speaker, the decision looks like a simple yes or no. There are a lot of Members who are going to vote on the basis of party unity and party loyalty, and that is important in this House. We need party loyalty. We have just shown it on our vote for Speaker.

On the other hand, there ought to be a stranger loyalty to the concept of representative government, and to the Constitution to which all of us have pledged our allegiance and which we all sworn to uphold. Partisan politics is not an unworthy pursuit, but there are higher values at stake in this particular case. What is at stake today is the fundamental basis of representative government.

Bluntly stated, the question is whether a ruthless majority can disenfranchise a half million people in the State of Indiana by denying a certified Member-elect his rightful seat in this House of Representatives.

Those of us who are tempted to follow the siren song of party loyalty will do well to think about the precedents that we will set here. For I assure you it is a brand new precedent that is being set by the Wright resolution.

None of us is safe from future ruthless majorities. None of our constituents is safe from having his or her vote pilfered in the name of partisan politics.

This is as important a vote as we are going to cast in this congressional session. It is not a precedural vote. We are talking about simple justice. This vote will determine whether we will let the people of Indiana decide who is going to represent them.

Vote down the Wright resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume. I had not intended to speak again on this subject; I do so only to make abundantly clear in the RECORD that no violation of precedent or principle is being contemplated by the resolution presently under consideration.

I understand, of course, the temptations on the part of Members on the other side who feel keenly about this closely contested election, to speak of this resolution as an exercise by a ruthless majority of raw power. That, of course, is not true. Had we been attempting to exercise the raw power of a ruthless majority, I suppose we would have asked that the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. McCloskey, be seated on the basis of partial returns, which we are informed at this point gave him a 44-vote margin. Of course, we would not have been justified in doing that, and so we did not seek to do that.

There were today three contested elections. One of them was resolved in behalf of a Republican, the gentleman from Guam. We made no effort to prevent his being seated and taking the oath of office.

The second was, or I think will be resolved in behalf of a Democrat, the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. STALLINGS].

The third we earnestly believe is too close to call. I do not think that smacks of raw power. In this one that we honestly believe to be too close for the House to exercise its constitutional responsibilities in determining who was the winner, we have asked that neither Member be seated. I think that is fair.

The second thing to which I want to address myself is the suggestion that has been made in the heat of the debate that we are acting without precedent or that we are creating a dangerous new precedent. That, of course, is not correct. What we are doing is precisely the same thing that was done in the case of Roush-Chambers.

I have with me sheets from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for that day, January 3, 1961, when the House resolved that matter just exactly as we are proposing to resolve this matter today.

On that day, Mr. Chambers had a certificate of election. Mr. Chambers was permitted to vote on that occasion in the election for Speaker, and did so, voting for his colleague, the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. Halleck. Just so the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. McIntyre) today was permitted to vote in that election; the same identical set of situations.

Contrary to what has been suggested today, there was a certificate of election unambiguously identifying the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. Chambers, as the duly elected Member on that occasion. In further support of that conclusion, I cite the reference in the RECORD in which the gentleman from Indiana, the minority leader, Mr. Halleck, referred to him as "Mr. Chambers, who has a certificate of election from the sovereign State of Indiana."

So I find that there is no basic distinction here. We are following precedent. It is the same kind of a situation that existed then. On that occasion, after the total recount was completed, it was determined, and I think not contested, that the secretary of state had been in error and that the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. Roush, in fact had been duly and truly elected.

I do not know what results will come from the inquiry and the total recount in this instance. I simply feel that it is one close enough that the House would be taking a rash action if it rushed to judgment in this case today.

I have just one other thing to say, and this is with respect to the suggestion that somehow what we are doing today runs contrary to the ruling of the Supreme Court in the case of Powell versus McCormack. That is not true either.

Section 5 of article I of the Constitution reads as follows:

Each House shall be the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own Members.

In the McCormack case, we were not attempting to judge an election; we were presuming to judge qualifications. The Court, in my opinion rightly, held that the House could not add to the constitutionally enumerated qualifications. So in the case of Mr. Powell we were held by the court to have acted unconstitutionally. We were not judging an election; we were judging qualifications.

Today, there is no question of qualifications. Nobody has suggested that the splendid young gentleman, Mr. McIntyre, lacks qualifications or that he is not constitutionally qualified to serve if it shall be determined that he was, indeed, duly elected. Nobody has made that suggestion. We are not presuming to judge his qualifications, as the House has in the Powell case.

What we are attempting to do here is to fulfill our constitutional responsibility to make certain that an election has been duly and truly held, that its result has been timely and regular, and that the procedures have been fair. In this instance, there is serious question.

So we are attempting to do what we think is the only fair thing to do. That is to ask each of the two contestants to stand aside until the Committee on House Administration shall have completed its recount and rendered its judgment.

Mr. Speaker, on the resolution, I call for the previous question.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question on his resolution?

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I will withhold my call for the previous question in order that I may yield to my friend, Mr. FRENZEL.

Mr. FRENZEL. I appreciate the gentleman yielding.

Mr. Speaker, on page 2, in lines 13 through 19, it describes the duties of the Clerk providing clerical assistance to maintain the full administrative functions for the Eighth District of Indiana.

My question is: Can the distinguished majority leader assure us that none of the employees of former Congressman McCloskey will be maintained on the House payroll for the purposes of performing full administrative functions with respect to the Eighth District of Indiana?

Mr. WRIGHT. I think I understand the gentleman's question.

I would presume that the Clerk of the House will act in exactly the same way as he did in the Phil Gramm case, and exactly as he does in cases involving the death of a Member. I think that is in keeping with his constitutional responsibilities.

I move the previous question on the resolution, Mr. Speaker.

SWEARING IN OF MEMBER

The SPEAKER. Before the Chair puts the question, will the gentleman from Montana [Mr. MARLENEE] kindly raise his right hand?

The Speaker administered the oath of office to the Honorable RON MARLENEE of Montana.

The SPEAKER. Congratulations. You are a Member of the Congress of the United States.

The question is on ordering the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 238, nays 177, not voting 11, as follows:

So the resolution was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SWEARING IN OF MEMBERS

The SPEAKER. Members-elect who have not taken the oath of office will kindly step to the well.

If the Members-elect will raise their right hands, the Chair will now administer the oath of office.

The SPEAKER administered the oath of office to the following Members-elect: Hon. TIMOTHY E. WIRTH; Hon. DENNIS E. ECKART of Ohio; Hon. WILLIAM L. DICKINSON; and Hon. WILLIAM CARNEY.

The SPEAKER. The gentlemen are now Members of Congress.

AUTHORIZING AND DIRECTING THE SPEAKER TO ADMINISTER THE OATH OF OFFICE TO MR. STALLINGS OF IDAHO

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I have a privileged resolution at the Clerk's desk, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 2

Resolved, That the Speaker is hereby authorized and directed to administer the oath of office to the gentleman from Idaho, Mr. STALLINGS.

□ 1520

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. WRIGHT] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I do not expect this debate to consume an hour.

Mr. Speaker, I will yield 15 minutes, for purposes of debate only, to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MYERS]. I also yield myself 15 minutes for that purpose, pending which, for that purpose only, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MYERS].

Mr. MYERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, earlier today when two Members were asked to stand aside, I asked to be one of those to stand aside for one reason.

I asked for Mr. STALLINGS of Idaho to stand aside for one reason. Even though it is not required by statute to do this, historically we have asked seats in question to stand aside, and then be sworn in without prejudice.

I expected Mr. STALLINGS, and still do, to be sworn in without prejudice to the pending case that there is in Idaho, as the proper procedure, as should have been done with Mr. McIntyre. I am not asking anyone to violate their constitutional obligation, as just has happened. I must say that I told some of my friends on the Republican side;

You watch, there are certain responsible Democrats that cannot violate their constitutional obligation; they will either vote "present" or not vote at all.

I was wrong.

I am shocked. There is right, and then there is politically wrong. This House by a partisan vote, has committed a political wrong today. I am not suggesting, nor do I suggest that anyone on the Republican side commit a political wrong. Mr. STALLINGS is entitled to his seat here today just as much as Mr. McIntyre was entitled, and has been denied by a very partisan vote, a very wrong doing that the American people will not forget.

This House has been becoming more corrupt through the abuse of power and this is really the ultimate today. Now you young Members can smile about it, but it will come back to haunt you; watch and see what happens in the future.

The majority leader earlier in the McIntyre case said that Indiana had not decided its election timely. He did not suggest any vote fraud or anything like that. He said it was still questionable.

Well, in the case of Mr. STALLINGS, there is vote fraud alleged by both Democrats and Republican office holders in Idaho. There is a case pending right this moment in the courts in Idaho. Every reason why you would not know for sure whether Mr. STALLINGS is going to continue to serve, but he has that certificate.

The only eligible thing we have to question is that certificate. He has the certificate today. The Secretary of State of the State of Idaho has written the Clerk of the House, and I read from the third paragraph, this date, for the State of Idaho, signed by the Secretary of State, in the third paragraph he says, and I quote:

Since issuance of the certificate of election by my office, certain allegations of substantial irregularities involving registration and voting in Blaine County, Idaho, have been presented by a member of our legislature. The alleged irregularities are stated to be of sufficient volume to potentially change the result of this congressional election.

Now, the dean of the Democratic delegation from Indiana [Mr. HAMILTON] very eloquently said earlier, and I cannot quote verbatim, but he said this:

The House cannot confidently rely upon the State's certification.

And he went on to say:

The House does not know today who really won that election in Indiana, because it is still up in the air.

He said;

To seat the wrong man today and unseat him tomorrow would be wrong.

Mr. STALLINGS, I think is entitled to his seat today. By our Constitution, we have no right to deny him that seat, but he ought to be sworn in without prejudice to the pending case. We do not know for sure. But you have done a wrong in Indiana by not seating Rick McIntyre, who was properly validated by every criteria required by this House and as stated by our Clerk, Ben Guthrie, earlier that he has a proper certification, on record right here, yet you denied him the seat.

I am not suggesting you do this, Mr. STALLINGS, even though if you carried out—we are consistent, and I would not accuse anybody of being that—but if you are consistent.

Again, the American people watching this will note where the noise comes from, I am sure. It has been predecided how this House shall vote this whole year, probably. Power is corrupt. You are seeing it happen here today, very corrupt.

Mr. friends, this is the final thing I am going to say. In Indiana, there is a recount pending. We do not know how it is going to turn out; but we should have seated the Member that had the certification. In Idaho, there are voting irregularities and fraud which may change the whole election. We do not know how it is going to come out, but we should have seated both and I am not asking you to commit two wrongs; but I am going to ask for a record vote; I want to see where the inconsistancies are.

I include the following:

STATE OF IDAHO,
SECRETARY OF STATE,
Boise, January 2, 1985.

BENJAMIN J. GUTHRIE,
Clerk, U.S. House of Representatives, U.S. Capitol Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. GUTHRIE: As the chief election officer of the State of Idaho I present this correspondence to further inform your office of certain proceedings presently pending in Idaho.

The Second District Congressional election in Idaho was decided by 170 votes.

Since issuance of the certificate of election by my office, certain allegations of substantial irregularities involving registration and voting in Blaine County, Idaho, have been presented by a member of our legislature. The alleged irregularities are stated to be of sufficient volume to potentially change the result of this congressional election.

In light of these complained of election irregularities, our office has sought the assistance of the Idaho Attorney General's office. The Idaho Attorney General's office is presently investigating these matters.

As you are aware our office has requested the assistance of the U.S. Attorney's office in investigating this matter.

Presently the U.S. Attorney's office has referred this request to their chief of election crimes branch in order that review of this matter may be expedited.

In Blaine County, Fifth District Judge Douglas Kramer has appointed special inquiry Magistrate Judge William Hart of Lincoln County, Idaho to head a probe of alleged voter fraud and election irrigularities in Blaine County.

Blaine County Prosecuting Attorney Keith Roark, a democrat, has also initiated an investigation in this matter. The special inquiry procedure gives the prosecutor broad subpoena powers to investigate these matters. Mr. Roark has also asked the Federal Bureau of Investigation to join in this investigation as well.

In the Idaho legislature, a special legislative committee will investigate the alleged election irregularities in Blaine County.

As the State's Chief Election official, I have pledged full cooperation and support to any partisan, bipartisan or non partisan agency, committee or office investigating the election irrigularities in Blaine County, Idaho.

Since it is contended the outcome of these investigations may have a substantial impact on this election as well as other local elections. I have requested that these bipartisan investigations be completed as soon as is possible.

It continues to be my fervent hope that these matters will be resolved shortly and that the will of the people of Idaho will be accurately stated by sending to Washington that representative duly and lawfully elected.

Yours Truly,
PETE T. CENARRUSA,
Secretary of State of Idaho.

I yield to my colleague from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GEKAS. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I intend to vote "yes" on this resolution, following the logic of the first vote.

Ms. FIEDLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MYERS of Indiana. I yield to the gentlewoman from California.

Ms. FIEDLER. I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

Mr. Speaker, I would simply like to share with the House a very brief experience that I had in this last election. My Democratic opponents were 10 votes separated between the two of them. The one who won by 10 votes went through a recount and lost by 18 votes.

The question is, had he been elected to Congress, would that kind of a situation actually raise a serious question because of the narrowness of the race. I think that when we make a decision of this kind that it is terribly, terribly important that we all understand that each and every one of us might be subject to it if the race was close enough.

I think we ought to cast our votes not based on the partisan impact of it, but based upon the long-term historical outcome of the elections of the people of our country.

Mr. MYERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL].

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, we have seen on the previous vote what some of us have declared to be a flagrant exercise of brutal political power, disenfranchising the half a million people in the Eighth District of Indiana.

I just want to assure Mr. STALLINGS and my Democratic friends that I do not think any Republicans are going to vote against Mr. STALLINGS. I intend to vote for him to take the oath today on the same basis that Mr. McIntyre should have taken the oath.

It will be a matter of delight for me to see how my friends on the Democratic side can rationalize one vote one way and another vote the other.

Let us look at the difference in the two campaigns. Both of them were close contests. STALLINGS was declared a winner by 170 votes; McIntyre by 40. Was there a contest filed by McCloskey? No. Is there a contest in the STALLINGS race? Yes, there is, duly filed with the House of Representatives, and of course a flock of court cases.

Are there irregularities alleged? Yes, in one Idaho case. Voting irregularities are claimed on a specified Indian reservation, as are other irregularities in voting contrary to Idaho law from post office boxes in Blaine County.

Mr. Speaker, there are at least seven investigations going forward; one by the Idaho attorney general, one by the Idaho secretary of state, one by the Integrity Division of the U.S. Department of Justice, one by the Fifth District Court in Idaho which has appointed a special judge-magistrate, one by the Blaine County attorney—a Democrat, by the way—one by both houses of the Idaho Legislature.

There are no allegations against the Member-elect, Mr. STALLINGS. He should be sworn in.

Mr. Speaker, this case simply underlines the Republican objections and bitterness to the unjustice that was done before.

I am going to read from the Committee Report of the House Administration Committee, in the case of Tunney versus Vessey in 1971, a vintage year; my first on the House Administration Committee.

□ 1530

It says here: "The House of Representatives has consistently been hesitant in declaring a seat vacant preferring rather to measure the wrong and correct the returns if this is at all possible." That should have been the keynote in the McIntyre case where a grave injustice has just been done by this House.

Two injustices do not make a justice.

Republicans will vote twice for justice. Republicans will not attempt to repeat the injustice to Mr. STALLINGS. Let those who vote on the double standard to explain their votes.

The resolution should be passed.

Mr. MYERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. CRAIG].

Mr. CRAIG. Mr. Speaker, on a very clear party line vote a few minutes ago, voting on House Resolution 1, it is my clear opinion that this body chose to steal a congressional seat away from 500,000 voters in the Eighth District of Indiana.

I hope this House will not make the same mistake today with the pending resolution as it relates to the race between George Hansen and DICK STALLINGS. Mr. STALLINGS is seated in this Chamber today and deserves to be sworn in because he holds, as Mr. McIntyre held, a valid certificate of election from the secretary of state of their respective States.

But is there, ladies and gentlemen of this body, a question. Does there still remain a question as to who was legally and properly elected in their representative States? Yes, I believe there is a question and that question is currently being pursued in both States. And that is a fair process that all of us would encourage that our States become engaged in if it were our race that were in question.

But today we chose to violate the Constitution, to throw it to the wind and say that all of those criterias by which we establish representation in the House simply do not matter.

We heard the majority leader in the House today give all of his explanation as to why McCloskey ought to be seated. And yet who held the certificate of election? There is a decision pending in the State of Indiana based on a recount and that is a valid process.

Then let me relate to you the circumstances that exist in Idaho today because they do exist and there is real question and that is being pursued by not only local, but State and Federal authorities.

Subsequent to the issuance of the election certificate it was revealed in an election contest lawsuit filed in State court that 2,481 votes were cast and counted in Blaine County, ID, which may be illegal in that the voters casting them had listed addresses in registering to vote which were inadequate under Idaho law. In fact, a preliminary investigation of these addresses through a test mailing has already shown that over 300 of the addresses may not be valid. The lawsuit charges that illegal votes changed the outcome of the election since they constitute 44 percent of the votes cast in that county, which went 74 percent in favor of DICK STALLINGS.

These registration irregularities in Blaine County have generated serious concern, as I mentioned, by local, State and now Federal authorities. Voter fraud is the question. Voter fraud is now being investigated by the State attorney general, by the Idaho Legislature, by the U.S. attorney. It has been recommended and the Justice Department has accepted the case under their voter fraud division to investigate it to see if in fact that has happen.

If voter fraud is possible, if the investigation demonstrates that that is what happened, it is a possibility that Congressman Hansen could have won that election by well over 1,000 votes. But that is not the question pending before this body today. The question pending is: Does DICK STALLINGS, Congressman-elect from the Second District of Idaho, hold a valid certificate of election from the secretary of the State of Idaho? Yes, I believe he does. Yes I believe he ought to be seated. And, yes, I believe the Members of this body unanimously ought to vote to seat him, without prejudice to the investigation that is currently underway in the State of Idaho.

We must not err in this instance. Just because this House in a partisan vote decided to err in the first instance of House Resolution 1 to steal from the citizens of Indiana a congressional seat, to set a trend in the 1st session of the 99th Congress, to show the raw force of the power by the vote, is no reason to err in this instance.

I have encouraged my colleagues on the Republican side to vote in favor of seating the Congressman elect from the Second District of Idaho. But not to prejudice the investigation that is underway.

Mr. Speaker, we have established a precedent today and I hope we will rue the day that we so made that mistake, that we will not once again violate the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GONZALEZ].

Mr. GONZALEZ. I thank the distinguished majority leader very much.

Mr. Speaker, the reason I rise is to protest a very serious infraction of the rules by the gentleman from Indiana, the gentleman who just spoke, and the gentleman from Minnesota, in maligning the motives that governed our decision in voting affirmatively for the resolution. They have called us corrupt, they have said we have cheated an electorate, they have questioned our motives as being strictly partisan motivated. And, Mr. Leader, I bitterly resent and protest that because in my case I certainly resent that and I demand an apology. I wanted to ask a question of the gentleman from Indiana, who was the most abusive. That was, since they were challenging the fact that this House was acting under the dictates of this resolution proposed as being unconstitutional would he not then be, in effect, advocating a dangerous precedent by arrogating to each and every secretary of state of each of the States a usurpation of the House's constitutional mandate to determine qualifications and elections of its Members?

I do not believe the opposition's basic premise: That the House is bound by a State's secretary of state's certification, no matter how outrageous, is sound. Rather, that would in reality cause the House to abdicate its constitutional prerogative. If the secretary of state of Indiana was not ready, as he obviously was not, to certify, he should have so indicated.

As a result, in that case, as well as in the case of Idaho, it leaves no alternative for this House but to proceed the way it has from the very beginning of the establishment of precedents under these situations.

Mr. Leader, I demand an apology because I do not think that we should be attacked this way and our votes maligned as thievery.

Second, I resent being called corrupt, which is what has been said on this floor, simply because I voted for a resolution in a way different from the other Member's way.

□ 1540

Mr. MYERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. PACKARD].

Mr. PACKARD. I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, 2 years ago I was in the same situation. I came here under a contested election. This body at that time could have deprived me of being seated. Fortunately, for me at least, they did not. Properly for me, they did not. It took a year and a half before the contest was finally, through the courts, determined.

I think it is inappropriate at this time for this body to set a precedent this year that has similar circumstances to previous years whereby this body takes it upon themselves to determine which Members are going to be seated and which Members are not going to be seated without consideration of the facts of the election.

When a secretary of state determines that the election is certified, I believe this body has an obligation to seat the certified winner of that election. It is imprudent to set a precedent now where this body assumes the responsibility to determine which Members will be seated and which will not. I intend to vote for seating Mr. STALLINGS, as I voted to seat Mr. McIntyre.

Mr. MYERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 1 minute.

Mr. Speaker, I think an apology is in order, however, it is going to be different than the gentleman from Texas solicited. I am going to apologize for this House's action to the people of the Eighth District of Indiana, and to Mr. McIntyre both of whom have been wronged today, very seriously, by the actions of this body.

In closing, several people have asked how they should vote on this. My earlier asking Mr. STALLINGS to stand aside was not vindictive. I was really shocked yesterday when I heard the rumor that the Speaker was not going to allow Mr. McIntyre to be seated. I did not believe it. I only asked Mr.

STALLINGS to stand aside for one purpose: That he be identified if there is a question in Idaho similar to the other question in Indiana, but both should have been seated. It is wrong not to, but please, no one on this side make the mistake of voting no. Vote aye on this motion please.

I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is significant that each of those on the other side who have spoken to this question have urged an aye vote on my motion. I regret very much that there has been an imputation of bad motive, or the implication raised that in voting to seat the gentleman from Idaho, [Mr. STALLINGS], we are acting in a manner inconsistent with the manner in which we acted earlier today when we chose to seat neither of the contestants in the Eighth District of Indiana.

The gentleman from Idaho I think may have been somewhat carried away, and I understand how that can happen, when he suggested that the House chose to steal a congressional seat. It may be that he misunderstood the purport or the intent of my remarks because he also characterized what I had said in that earlier instance by stating that the majority leader gave his reasons why Mr. McCloskey should be seated.

Now, that is not quite the case. I did not argue that Mr. McCloskey should be seated; I argued merely that we should seat neither of the contestants until it was determined who was the winner.

I think there are several clearly distinguishable features between this instance and the instance which we earlier resolved. In the first place, the Idaho case is similar to hundreds of cases that have occurred, whereas the Indiana case is distinct in various particulars. In the Idaho instance, the process was completed in a timely fashion. In Indiana, the process is unlikely to be completed for weeks yet to come. In Idaho, uniform procedures were followed for counting the ballots. In Indiana, the ballots were counted under 15 different sets of rules, and some of them have not been fully counted yet.

In Idaho the certification proceeded according to State law. In Indiana, the certification was held up until one county completed its recount, then hastily made and has not been left open for change. In Idaho, there was no discrepancy in the result. A recount was conducted by the State, was completed, and the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. STALLINGS], was declared to be the victor.

In Indiana, by contrast, the result is different according to which recount totals one uses. In Idaho, the State law is clear. In Indiana, the State law is complex and confusing. In Idaho, there were very few votes disallowed. In Indiana, hundreds, literally hundreds of votes have been disallowed.

Finally, in Idaho, all the State remedies have been exhausted and Mr. STALLINGS has been declared the winner. In Indiana, State remedies still remain. For all of these reasons, the two cases are clearly distinguishable, and I do not expect that Members are likely to vote against this present resolution, but I do want all of us to understand that in so doing we are not behaving in a manner inconsistent from the manner which we followed earlier in our determination that we were not yet prepared on the strength of the information available to us at this moment, to declare who the winner was in the instance of the Eighth District of Indiana.

In the present instance, I think we are prepared, and I move the previous question on the resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore [Mr. FOLEY]. Without objection, the previous question is ordered on the resolution.

The question is on the resolution.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 407, nays 0, answered "present" 1, not voting 18, as follows:

Resolved, That the Rules of the House of Representatives of the Ninety-eighth Congress, including all applicable provisions of law and concurrent resolutions adopted pursuant thereto which constituted the Rules of the House at the end of the Ninety-eighth Congress, are hereby adopted as the Rules of the Ninety-ninth Congress, with the following amendments:

(1) In Rule I, clause 7, insert after the words "three legislative days" the following: ", except that with the permission of the House he may name a Member to act as Speaker pro tempore only to sign enrolled bills and joint resolutions for a period of time specified in the designation, notwithstanding any other provision of this clause".

(2) In Rule X, clause 1(e)(1), strike the words "to consist of thirty Members as follows", and insert in lieu thereof: "consisting of the following Members".

In Rule X, clause 1(e)(1)(A), strike the word "twenty-eight".

(3) In Rule XI, clause 1(a)(1) is amended to read as follows:

"1. (a)(1) The Rules of the House are the rules of its committees and subcommittees so far as applicable, except that a motion to recess from day to day, and a motion to dispense with the first reading (in full) of a bill or resolution, if printed copies are available, are nondebatable motions of high privilege in committees and subcommittees.".

(4) In Rule XI, clause 3(e), insert before the period at the end of the last sentence thereof the following: ": Provided, however, Each committee or subcommittee chairman shall determine, in his discretion, the number of television and still cameras permitted in a hearing or meeting room".

In Rule XI, clause 3(f)(3), strike the first sentence and insert after the word "permitted" in the second sentence the following: "by a committee or subcommittee chairman".

In Rule XI, clause 3(f)(5), insert after the word "shall" the following: "operate from fixed positions but shall".

In Rule XI, clause 3(f)(8) is amended to read as follows:

"(8) In the allocation of the number of still photographers permitted by a committee or subcommittee chairman in a hearing or meeting room, preference shall be given to photographers from Associated Press Photos and United Press International Newspictures. If requests are made by more of the media than will be permitted by a committee or subcommittee chairman for coverage of the hearing or meeting by still photography, that coverage shall be made on the basis of a fair and equitable pool arrangement devised by the Standing Committee of Press Photographers.".

(5) In Rule XI, clause 5, insert after paragraph (e) the following new paragraph:

"(f)(1) For continuance of necessary investigations and studies by—

"(A) each standing and select committee established by these rules; and

"(B) each select committee of the House, which was established by resolution during the preceding Congress, and for which a reestablishing resolution is introduced in the present Congress (but only if no resolution of the preceding Congress providing expenses for investigations of such select committee contained provision for the termination of the funding of the select committee at or before the end of that Congress);

there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House such sums as may be necessary for the period beginning at noon on January 3 and ending at midnight on March 31 of the first session of Congress.

"(2) Each committee referred to in subparagraph (1) shall be entitled for each month in the period specified in subparagraph (1) to 9 per centum of the total annualized amount made available under expense resolutions for such committee for the second session of the preceding Congress.

"(3) Payments under this paragraph shall be made on vouchers authorized by the committee involved, signed by the chairman of such committee, except as provided in subparagraph (4), and approved by the Committee on House Administration.

"(4) Notwithstanding any provision of law, rule of the House, or other authority, from noon on January 3 of the first session of a Congress, until the election by the House of the committee involved in that Congress, payments under this paragraph shall be made on vouchers signed by—

"(A) the chairman of such committee as constituted at the close of the preceding Congress; or

"(B) if such chairman is not a Member in the present Congress, the ranking majority party member of such committee as constituted at the close of the preceding Congress who is a Member in the present Congress.

"(5)(A) The authority of a committee to incur expenses under this paragraph shall expire upon agreement by the House to a primary expense resolution for such committee.

"(B) Amounts made available under this paragraph shall be expended in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Committee on House Administration.

"(C) The provisions of this paragraph shall be effective only insofar as not inconsistent with any resolution, reported by the Committee on House Administration and adopted after the date of adoption of these rules.".

(6) In Rule XVI, clause 4, strike out the words "one half of such time to" in the third sentence and insert in lieu thereof the following: "except that on demand of the floor manager for the majority it shall be in order to debate such motion for one hour. One half of any debate on such motions shall".

(7) In Rule XXVIII, clause 2(a), insert before the period at the end of the last sentence thereof the following: ", except that if the floor manager for the majority and the floor manager for the minority are both supporters of the conference report, one third of such debate time shall be allotted to a Member who is opposed to said conference report".

In Rule XXVIII, clause 2(b), insert before the period at the end of the last sentence thereof the following: ", except that if the floor manager for the majority and the floor manager for the minority are both supporters of the original motion offered by the floor manager for the majority to dispose of the amendment, one third of such debate time shall be allotted to a Member who is opposed to said motion".

Mr. WRIGHT (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do so only to inquire of the distinguished majority leader whether it is his intention to reserve or to grant the minority one-half of the debate time on adoption of the rules.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHEL. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. WRIGHT. Why, precisely so. There would be no intention to do anything other than that. The minority would be entitled to a half of the time involved in the debate on this resolution.

Mr. MICHEL. With that assurance, Mr. Speaker, I withdraw may reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. WRIGHT] is recognized for 1 hour.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. WRIGHT was allowed to speak out of order.)

TIME OF MEETING OF STEERING AND POLICY COMMITTEE

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I should like to inform my colleagues on the Democratic side who are members of the Steering and Policy Committee that that committee will meet in room H-122 immediately upon the adoption of this resolution. That may come an hour from now. That meeting had been scheduled originally for 4:30. It will not be held until the completion of this resolution.

Now, having consumed that time, I should like to yield such time as he may require to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. FROST] the chairman of the Committee on Rules Modifications, who served in that capacity for the Democratic caucus.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, the recommended rules changes embodied in House Resolution 7 are, for the most part, noncontroversial and the Democratic caucus has not recommended major changes in the way we do business in the House. Before we vote on the adoption of the House rules and these recommended changes, I would like take a few minutes to briefly summarize the recommendations of the caucus contained in House Resolution 7.

The first amendment changes rule 1 to enable the Speaker to designate a Member, for a specific period of time and with the permission of the House, to sign enrolled bills and joint resolutions in his absence. Under present rules, a Speaker pro tempore must be formally elected by the House to sign enrolled bills. This limited change is only designed to facilitate the signing of bills for transmittal to the Senate and to the President.

The second proposed amendment removes the numerical limitation contained in rule X on the total number of Members who may serve on the Budget Committee. The change would allow the size of the committee to be determined at the beginning of each Congress, in the same manner as all other standing committees, and would not affect the limitations on terms of membership set forth in House rules relative to service on the Committee on the Budget. Since the creation of the committee in 1974, its size has been increased three times, in the 94th, 97th and 98th Congress.

The third amendment to the rules provides, in rule XI, a nondebatable motion to dispense with the first reading of a bill by a committee clerk prior to the reading of the bill for amendment in committee markup. This amendment does not do away with the requirement to read the bill in full upon demand, nor does it do away with the requirement to read the bill for amendment; rather, it provides that the first reading may be dispensed with if a majority of the committee agrees to a motion to dispense with the reading.

The fourth rules change amends rule XI to provide a full committee or subcommittee chairman with the discretion to determine the appropriate number of cameras to be permitted at any given committee meeting or hearing. The chairman will be required to follow the standards of dignity and decorum set forth in House rules. The present House rule limits television cameras to four and press photographers to five in any committee meeting for hearings.

The fifth amendment provides, in rule XI, new automatic interim funding for committee, select committees established in the House rules, and select committees established by resolution in the previous Congress for which a reestablishing resolution is introduced in the new Congress and for which funding was not terminated in the preceding Congress. The automatic funding is provided between January 3 and March 31 of the first session of a Congress. Resolutions providing such interim funding have been routinely adopted at the beginning of each Congress, and this rules change codifies that practice.

The sixth proposed rules change amends rule XVI to provide for 1 hour of debate, upon demand of the majority floor manager of a bill or joint resolution, on a motion to recommit with instructions, with the time to be equally divided and controlled by the maker of the motion and a Member opposed. Under current rules, such a motion, which is the prerogative of the minority party to offer, is subject to 10 minutes of debate, equally divided.

The final rules change amends rule XXVIII to provide that one-third of the debate time on a conference report, or on a Senate amendment reported from conference in disagreement, be allotted to a Member who is opposed to the conference report or to the motion to dispose of the amendment, but only if the floor managers for the majority and the minority support the conference report or motion. Current rules provide for no automatic distribution of time to a Member who is opposed. Under the rules change as proposed, any Member, whether from the majority or the minority, may seek the 20 minutes in opposition under ordinary rules of recognition when both floor managers support the proposition.

Mr. Speaker, as the majority leader indicated, the time will be equally divided, for purposes of debate only, and our side has yielded a total of 30 minutes to the minority.

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 3 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, we will seek to defeat the previous question so that we may bring before the House a comprehensive package of reforms covering nearly all aspects of House operations.

There have been a number of studies done on House operations and they all have come to the same conclusion—change is needed. Even surveys of House Members produce the same result.

Change the rules.

Change the way we operate around here.

This year, we can add two more pressing reasons for reform. One is money.

This is a billion and a half dollar Congress.

We're spending too much and accomplishing too little.

We waste public funds on too many subcommittees, too much staff, and too much paperwork. Too much of what we do is for show.

We put very little meat on the public platter and a lot of fat and gristle, but the taxpayers pay for it as though it was all 100-percent prime beef.

Let's begin the deficit reduction search right here, right now.

The second reason is one of pride. In 2 years, we will celebrate the convening of the 100th Congress.

This will be a special time for those of us who cherish this institution and the part it plays in the governance of the greatest Nation on Earth.

We must not convene a 100th Congress stricken with inefficiency, plagued by bitter partisanship, and so cumersome and autocratic, it can't conduct the people's business.

This is our last chance to heal this House before we shine the national spotlight on her for the bicentennial of our legislative branch of Government.

We propose reducing the number and size of committees and subcommittees.

We propose oversight reform, less duplication, less staffing, reductions in the volume of mail we send out, a ban on proxy voting, fair committee ratios and other reforms.

We all know something needs to be done. We have put it off for too long.

Let's give the people a House in which they can take pride.

Now let me turn to brief remarks relative to the Democratic Rules Package.

The new rules of the House as proposed in the resolution belfore us, House Resolution 7, are a conglomeration of ideas of assorted subgroups of the Democratic caucus.

I am referring specifically to the "Caucus Committee on Organizations, Study and Review" and the DSG or Democratic study group.

The changes for the 99th Congress are relatively modest compared to some of the whoppers I've seen dragged out here on opening days in the past.

Some of these amendments are thoughtful or required, while others could be damaging to the rights of my minority Members in this House.

I would like to address several of the proposed House rules changes.

DESIGNATED BILL SIGNER

The change would allow the Speaker, with the permission of the House, to name a Member to sign enrolled bills and joint resolutions for a specific period of time.

This is a worthwhile change which would allow the Speaker to be absent from the House while still allowing our enrolled bills to be sent to the President promptly.

BUDGET COMMITTEE SIZE

This change would strike the requirement that the Budget Committee consist of 30 members.

This cannot be considered radical, as we enlarged the committee to 31 members during the 98th Congress. The Democratic caucus has tinkered more with these provisions of the Budget Act than any others.

They've changed the earlier Member rollover requirement from two terms to three terms and made exceptions for the chairman.

Just prior to this Congress, the caucus decided only to change the size for the third time, now there is no limit.

This amendment supposedly would allow the size of the committee to be adjusted by the Democratic leadership in negotiations with the minority at the start of each Congress.

We have abandoned many of the underlying principles of the Budget Act as originally put forth.

We set the size and composition for a particular purpose.

It was intended to be small enough to act while still carrying a requirement that there be members of the Appropriations and Ways and Means Committees as well as a leadership representative from both sides of the aisle on the committee.

We originally required three members on the majority side of the committee to be from Ways and Means and Appropriations, while requiring two from those committees on the minority side. The remaining members are to be from all the other committees.

This was intended to give the money committees fair representation on the Budget Committee.

This would not be a problem if we maintained the committee's originally intended ratio of no more than 3 to 2, majority to minority.

As it has been, my committee on committees has to live with a ratio of 20 to 11, almost 2 to 1. If you subtract our required five members, we have only six slots from all the other committees, as compared to 10 on the majority side.

Finally, if we are going to achieve bipartisanship on our budgets, we must make the process bipartisan.

Changes which are made unilaterally by one party do not aid in achieving that bipartisanship.

FIRST READING IN COMMITTEES

This change would make a motion to dispense with the first reading of a bill or resolution in committees and subcommittees a nondebatable motions of high privilege if printed copies of the bill or resolution are available.

This change does not appear innocuous on its face, so we must first understand its origin. In one committee in particular our objection was regularly raised whenever a member felt that the committee was rushing into its deliberations.

Unfortunately, many of our committees and subcommittees are rushing as we have far too many committees and subcommittees.

With proxy voting, we have tried to let our membership be everywhere at once.

If we addressed real legislative reform and limited subcommittees and the size and membership of committees and banned proxy voting—there would be no need for this amendment.

TV CAMERAS AND COMMITTEE AND SUBCOMMITTEE HEARINGS

Present rules allow no more than four television cameras and no more than five still cameras at any committee or subcommittee meeting or hearing.

This change gives chairmen of committees and subcommittees the authority to determine the number of TV and still cameras allowed.

INTERIM COMMITTEE FUNDING

This change would automatically give every standing and select committee interim funding from January 3 through March 31 at the start of the Congress.

The rate is to be a monthly rate of 9 percent of the total annualized amount made available last session. This would result in an 8-percent increase over the prior year if carried on for the remainder of the session.

This change would not apply to a select committee with a termination date at or before the end of the preceding Congress.

This was designed to avoid the possibility of a single Member blocking the interim funding resolution at the start of each Congress.

These resolutions are routinely brought up by unanimous consent after consultation with the ranking minority member of the House Administration Committee. There has been no objections as the minority always sought to cooperate with the majority.

Obviously, the majority didn't care about cooperations as they completely ignored the minority membership of House Administration when they proposed this change.

DEBATE TIME ON MOTIONS TO RECOMMIT WITH INSTRUCTIONS

This change and the following were the second DSG proposals. Both deal with debate time and who would control it.

This change is a fundamental departure from the purpose of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1970 which established the current 10-minute debate procedure.

This new rules change would allow up to 1-hour debate on motions to recommit with instructions if so demanded by the majority floor manager.

We in the minority have always been in favor of more debate on the motion to recommit when instructions are offered.

The only problem with this rules change is that it leaves the sole discretion for longer debate time to the majority manager and no discretions to the minority.

To allow only the majority manager to lengthen the debate time on a motion moved by someone else is contrary to most parliamentary principles.

To allow such arbitrariness in deciding which motion is important to be debated at length runs contrary to any spirit of bipartisanship necessary to achieve sound legislation.

DEBATE TIME ON UNAPPROVED CONFERENCE REPORTS

This change would allow one-third of the debate time on conference reports or on a Senate amendment to a motion reported in disagreement, to any Member who is opposed, but only in those instances when the floor managers for the majority and minority are both in support of the measure.

This proposal moves in the opposite direction of the prior change.

Here we are allowing any minority Member a share of the debate time on his own request when opposed, while the floor managers are in favor.

THE REPUBLICAN SUBSTITUTE

I would like to include at this point the rules package we would offer if the previous question is defeated. Included is the legislative language as well as brief descriptions and background information on those changes.

The reforms we are proposing are intended to streamline House operations and save the taxpayers millions of dollars in the process.

REPUBLICAN BLUEPRINT FOR A HOUSE THAT WORKS

THE NEED FOR CHANGE

December 1984

Subcommittee Proliferation: In the 93rd Congress the House had 21 standing committees with 119 subcommittee assignments; in the 98th Congress the House had 22 standing committees and 146 subcommittees—a 22 percent increase in subcommittees; 10 House committees currently have more than six subcommittees;

Member Subcommittee Assignments: In the 93rd Congress there were 1,642 subcommittee seats, and 154 Members had five or more subcommittee assignments: in the 98th Congress there were 1,721 subcommittee seats (a 5% increase from the 93rd Congress), and 198 Members had five or more subcommittee assignments (a 28% increase from the 93rd Congress);

Committee Staff Proliferation: In the 93rd Congress, House committees had 848 committee staff; in the 98th Congress committees had 1,732 committee staff—a 104% increase; the ratio of committee staff to committee member in the 93rd Congress was 1 to 1; the ratio in the 98th Congress was 2.1 to 1;

Party Ratios on Committees: In the 98th Congress the minority party was underrepresented on committees by 23 seats, and on subcommittees by 62 seats—effectively disenfranchising 11.5 million Americans at the committee level and 31 million Americans at the subcommittee level;

Proxy Voting: In the 93rd Congress the House voted to abolish proxy voting in committees, but it was restored on the first day of the 94th Congress before it could take effect; in the 98th Congress, 18 of the 22 standing committees permitted proxy voting.

One-third Committee Quorums: In the 95th Congress, the House adopted a rule permitting committees to transact all business (except reporting measures) with only one-third of their members present; in the 98th Congress, 15 of the 22 standing committees had rules permitting one-third quorums;

Multiple Referral of Legislation: In the 93rd Congress, the House adopted a rule to permit bills to be considered by more than one committee; a study in the 95th Congress revealed that such multiple-referred bills consume four times as much meeting and hearing time as singly-referred bills, yet have half the chance of being reported from committees, and more than three times less chance of being passed by the House;

Oversight: In the 93rd Congress it was estimated that House committees and subcommittees spent only 1.1 percent of their time reviewing existing laws, programs and agencies within their jurisdiction; while a survey in the 96th Congress revealed that committees were spending more time on oversight, 77 percent of the Members surveyed felt committees were still doing an inadequate oversight job; and while a rule adopted in the 93rd Congress required committees to publish their oversight agendas at the beginning of each Congress, and all have done so, none of the committees require formal adoption of the agenda (this has been largely a staff operation), and there are no means of assuring implementation or accountability;

House Broadcasting: In the 96th Congress, the House began public broadcast coverage of its floor proceedings under a system owned and operated by the House and controlled by the Speaker; in the 98th Congress, the Speaker unilaterally altered the camera coverage policy during special order speeches to show the nearly-empty chamber in an attempt to embarrass minority party Members making speeches; further restrictions are now being considered by the Democratic Caucus to further curtail minority party speeches and limit their exposure over the broadcast system.

Franked Mail: Members of Congress are mailing out many times the number of pieces of correspondence being sent to them. The cost of the franking privilege in 1984 was $107 million.

BLUEPRINT FOR A HOUSE THAT WORKS

Prepared by the Republican Leadership, U.S. House of Representatives, October 1984

INTRODUCTION

The U.S. House of Representatives is plagued by abuses of power inefficiency and partisan self-interest. It is the inevitable outgrowth of a half-century of nearly uninterrupted Democratic control of the institution.

The mismanagement and misdirection of House activities has become so severe that the legislative process has suffered immeasurably and the American people have been denied the quality of legislation, the policy formulation and the representation they have the right to expect.

Mismanagement of the House has a crippling effect not only on the legislative process and its capacity to conduct the people's business, but on the entire government, for our system of government cannot function properly unless all three branches carry equal weight as well as equal responsibility. A Congress that is too weak and inefficient will produce Executive and Judicial Branches which are too strong and too domineering.

Democrats have had the reins of power far too long. Democrats have had control over the House for the last 30 years without interruption, and for 48 of the last 52 years. It is time for a change.

We propose: Smaller committees; Fewer subcommittees; Fair committee ratios; Less staff; Lower costs; Streamlined rules and procedures; More even work load; Less overlap; Greater oversight; and More accountability and openness.

The recommendations set forth here are designed to bring about those changes.

Section 1: Committee reform

FAIR RATIOS, SMALLER COMMITTEES

The House of Representatives has turned its back on the principle of one-man, one-vote enunciated by the Supreme Court 22 years ago.

Committee ratios are determined by the Speaker and the Democratic party every two years prior to the beginning of each Congress.

Republicans, under the rule of Speaker O'Neill, have been denied fair representation on committees and subcommittees and as a result those millions of Americans served by Republicans in the House have been denied a voice in the legislative process. The ability of the Republicans to advance viewpoints, pass amendments, or implement changes is seriously impaired by inequitable committee and subcommittee ratios. Adherence to improperly aligned ratios disparages the very spirit of representative government and is equivalent to political disenfranchisement.

The Democrats have claimed that the shortweighting of the minority by a few seats is not that significant. But many crucial committee and subcommittee decisions are often passed by narrow margins, such as the Appropriations Committee's one-vote approval of a rescission of funding for construction of a nuclear powered aircraft carrier, the Commerce Committee's one-vote approval of retaining price controls on natural gas, and the Foreign Affairs' Committee's one vote approval of a removal of restrictions on U.S. arms sales to Turkey. Surely the closeness of these recent votes illustrate the importance of a single vote in committee deliberations.

Noted scholar and former Representative DeAlva Stanwood Alexander, who spent most of his House career in the majority, wrote in 1916, "Such disproportion, even if technically justified, is unfortunate, for it is likely to minimize, if it does not absolutely destroy, the wholesome influence of a vigilant opposition."

Equitable committee ratios are necessary for two fundamental reasons: to check the power of any majority and to ensure that the committee process blends a broad range of legislative views and thereby achieves the best legislative product possible.

The very nature of our form of government demands that the House exercises fairness in ratios as has been done in the Republican-controlled Senate.

Democrats have also refused to allow Republicans to participate in the drafting of Committee reports which oftentimes are influential in how a law is interpreted and implemented. The Minority should be allowed to contribute to report language.

Democrats have also granted subcommittee chairmen sole power to issue exercise subpoenas. This legal device can be a powerful instrument and should only be utilized with the consent of the full subcommittee.

Committee and subcommittee ratios in the 98th Congress were in serious imbalance, particularly on the key committees. The ratio of Republicans to Democrats in the House in the 98th Congress was 38 percent. The ratio on the Ways and Means Committee was 34 percent. The ratio on the Education and Labor Committee was 29 percent and the ratio on the House Administration Committee was 30 percent. Republicans were denied 8 seats on the subcommittees of Energy and Commerce Committee and 7 additional seats on the subcommittees of the Foreign Affairs Committee.

The Democratic leadership has always found new and innovative ways to abuse committee assignments. In the 98th Congress, the Democrats made temporary appointments to committees, temporary appointments that became permanent, to no one's surprise. When two vacancies in the House occurred, one in California and one in Wisconsin, the sizes of two committees were simply expanded to accommodate the new members. The new members could have filled already existing vacancies on other committees. Increasing the size of committees was improper and should have been avoided.

House Committees, as a result of this kind of action are far too large and cumbersome. The Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs Committee for example, had more than 50 members and 8 subcommittees in the 98th Congress.

Committee sizes should only be determined after consultations between the Democratic and Republican party leadership, and the full chamber should be allowed to vote on individual resolutions setting out committee size and funding.

CUTTING COMMITTEE STAFF AND FUNDING

One of the greatest embarrassments of our current legislative system is the excessive size of staffing and funding of the committees of the House.

The committees are over-staffed and cost too much. Committee staff is also apportioned between Republicans and Democrats in a manner that cripples the minority's ability to serve in the capacity of the loyal opposition, conduct research, offer alternatives to bills and amendments, or oversee the activities of the majority. In short, millions of Americans are denied fair access to the legislative process.

Since the 93rd Congress, which convened a decade ago (1973), the number of House Committee staff has gone from 1,143 to 2,014 in the 98th Congress which convened in 1983. That is a 76 percent increase in just 10 years.

It has gotten to the point where on some committees there are three or four staff members for every Member of the committee. The District of Columbia Committee majority staff is so large there are 4.1 staff per member and the Education and Labor and Energy and Commerce Committees have 3.1 and 3.5 staff per member respectively.

In the 98th Congress, Republicans made up 38.1 percent of the membership in the House. If that ratio were accurately reflected in Committee staff, 322 more Republican employees would be required to make up the shortfall. There was a 307 staff shortfall in the 96th Congress, and in the 97th Congress, where Republicans made up 44 percent of the House, staff assigned to them in committees was only 14.6 percent or a shortfall of 447 positions. Make no mistake about it, we don't want more staff, we want severe reductions in current majority positions.

The worst case by far in the 98th Congress was the Energy and Commerce Committee which employed 109 investigative staff, only 9 of whom were Republican staff.

Subcommittee staff should fall under the jurisdiction of the full Committee Chairman for better control and greater efficiency.

Funding of committee work is equally excessive.

Ten years ago, in the 93rd Congress, first session, total Committee funding amounted to $17.4 million. The committee funding in the 98th Congress, first session, was $34.6 million or a 98 percent increase.

Some committees have tried to hold the line while others have been absolutely outrageous in their demands.

Since the 93rd Congress, there has been no appreciable increase in the number of bills and resolutions reported or passed.

Ten years ago, the committees filed 693 reports, and reported out 906 bills and resolutions. In the 98th Congress, the committees filed just over 640 reports, and reported out 725 bills and resolutions.

In fact, while the cost of Congress as a whole has skyrocketed, the number of bills enacted into law has not changed much over the last 10 years. The 93rd Congress produced a total of 923 bills and resolutions, while the 98th Congress produced 858 to date. The most productive Congress was the 95th with 1,027 bills enacted into law.

That degree of productivity does not warrant huge increases in staff and funding. Republicans do not believe the House should be producing more bills. Oftentimes, under Democratic rule, the less done the better. This Congress was notorious for producing bad bills and failing to produce needed ones.

We propose a substantial reduction of staff. Had our formula been implemented in the 98th Congress, it would have resulted in a limit on Democratic staff to no more than twice the amount afforded to Republicans. We believe staff could be reduced by hundreds.

NUMBER OF COMMITTEES AND JURISDICTION

There is a saying within the Halls of Congress: If you pass a Democratic member of the House whom you don't know by name, call them Mr. or Madame Chairman, because there are so many committees and subcommittees in the House just about every Democrat chairs one.

That isn't much of an exaggeration. There are 22 standing committees and 141 subcommittees. The number of subcommittees is up by 32 in just the last 10 years. Four select committees have been added in the last decade and there has been a virtual explosion of special task forces, special interest caucuses and other organizations. Nearly all of these legislative or quasi-legislative bodies consume tax dollars, federal staff and the time and energy of legislators.

In just the last two years, the expansion of subcommittees has created 59 new seats for members of the House, further dividing their time and energy.

We believe that the proliferation of subcommittees and other bodies must be stopped. At least four or five standing and select committees and at least 20 subcommittees ought to be eliminated. The District of Columbia Committee, for example, could function better as a subcommittee of another standing committee, as could most of the select committees now in existence. The Senate has a 3-member District of Columbia subcommittee with only 10 staff and that small subcommittee appoints local judges, which the House Committee does not.

There is no reason why the Post Office and Civil Service Committee should have separate subcommittees on Postal Operations and Postal Personnel. The two should be combined to save staff, funding, space and equipment, and probably eliminate a lot of make-work. There is no reason why the House Banking Committee needs a subcommittee on International Development and another on International Trade. There is no reason why you need 22 different committees and subcommittees having jurisdiction over energy issues.

Jurisdictional problems are compounded by the practice of sequential referral, the assigning of one piece of legislation to several committees. Environmental issues are often divided among three separate standing committees and an untold number of subcommittees. Each standing committee and subcommittee under the rules can amend or change any part of the legislation regardless of whether they have jurisdiction. The practice creates a terrible logjam of legislation that in some cases ultimately kills the bill entirely.

As is discussed in another section of this study, consideration should be given to eliminating separate House and Senate committees, such as the Budget Committees and creating joint committees of the Congress. Select Committee functions could be merged with standing committees.

Current events, changing times, and new national and legislative priorities demand that standing committees and subcommittees undergo a major realignment. A study of such a realignment with mandatory requirements for implementation is badly needed and long overdue.

Past efforts at reform have failed, primarily due to the unwillingness of the Democratic leadership to undertake such a task. Some progress has been made, but not nearly enough.

The last study of the problem by the Patterson Committee in the 96th Congress found broad support for realignment and for reform of the committee system. A member survey conducted then found that 81 percent of House members felt the number of subcommittees should be reduced and 82 percent felt that limitations should be placed on members' subcommittee assignments. It is clear, as well, that major steps must be taken to improve the flow of legislation through the subcommittees by eliminating overlap in jurisdiction.

PHANTOM LEGISLATING

A quorum is that number of members in a legislative body whose presence is necessary to conduct business.

Today, House rules make it very easy for committees to conduct business without a quorum present.

Currently, a bill can be drafted (marked-up) in committee with only one-third of the members present.

In committees, the frequent lack of a quorum coupled with the use of proxy voting and the unfair ratios, have created an atmosphere in which a few make decisions for many.

House rules provide that no House committee may use proxy votes unless the committee specifically authorizes them. If the committee chooses to authorize proxies, such proxies should be in writing, assert that the member is absent on official business, designate who is to execute the proxy and be limited to a specific measure. However, some committees have simply made blanket use of proxies without regard to their effort on the process.

Proxy voting is in fact "phantom" voting and it minimizes the members' accountability, makes absenteeism acceptable, and detracts from the very basic concept of legislative government.

We believe proxy voting ought to be banned.

Section II: Rules and procedures

BETTER SCHEDULING OF LEGISLATION

In an organization as complex as the House of Representatives, with so many different committees and subcommittees, and with such a wide array of duties imposed upon Members, care needs to be exercised in developing the legislative schedules of Members, committees and the House as a whole.

Scheduling in the House today is an abomination.

The House should be in session more days per week, with a fixed schedule, say for at least five weeks at a time and two weeks for district work periods. Ample time should be allotted for committee work. Fewer conflicts in committee and subcommittee schedules should be allowed. Members should have more opportunities to better allocate their time. Scheduling ought to be computerized. More emphasis should be placed on the oversight responsibilities of the Legislative Branch.

A number of proposals should be given serious consideration.

Committees could be required not only to adopt oversight plans but be accountable for them. Currently, each House Committee prepares oversight plans in consultation with the Government Operations Committee.

However, the Government Operations Committee has indicated that these meetings and written plans are not an effective means of coordinating and implementing oversight activities. The dismal record of the House bears that out.

Oversight could be concentrated in three or four key committees and oversight plans should be made public early in a new Congress.

There should be better long-range scheduling of floor activities and floor time. The party leaderships should consult formally on the floor schedule.

TELEVISED SESSIONS

Televised coverage of House proceedings by a broadcast system controlled internally by the Speaker of the House has been in effect since the 96th Congress.

The coverage of House proceedings is limited, in that coverage is prohibited during those periods when an electronic vote is in progress so that the viewing public cannot see the interaction that takes place in the well of the House and the changing of votes by individual members. Limitations are also in place during regular sessions of the House which prohibit the "panning" of the Chamber during debate, although such a practice occurs during the Special Orders period following regular business.

We believe that coverage of House proceedings ought to be completed and unedited. We also believe that consideration ought to be given to delegating authority for day-to-day control of the system to a committee of broadcast journalists.

RULES AND THE RULES COMMITTEE

The Rules Committee is the traffic cop of the House, dictating how a piece of legislation gets to the floor, how many amendments will be considered, and how much time will be allowed for debate. The Committee usually sets the conditions for debate and may also waive various points of order against a bill or an amendment which would otherwise prevent House action. Because the Rules Committee's critical role in controlling the legislative process, the Committee has traditionally been held under the tight control of the Speaker, and that is as it should be.

The Rules Committee is currently composed of nine Democrats and four Republicans—a ratio which is substantially larger than the ration of Democrats to Republicans in the full House.

The Rules Committee in recent years has become autocratic and dictatorial, waiving certain rules of the House to accommodate favored interests and in some cases, not only dictating what amendments can be offered but how those amendments will be written.

In a growing number of circumstances rules have been fashioned to provide Democrats with the opportunity to vote in favor of several alternatives so that they can cover all the bases with their constitutents, while in the end voting with the Democratic leadership on a leadership endorsed position.

The practice of waiving rules of the House has become so common that the first appropriation bill considered by the House this year contained what amounted to a blanket waiver of all of the budget enforcement rules we have.

Rules from the Rules Committee should not play fast and loose with long-standing House rules and procedures. Waivers of House rules should be more difficult to obtain and the Rules Committee ought to be required to justify them in writing. More open rules that allow for amendments to be offered ought to be granted, especially on bills of a complex and/or controversial nature.

SUSPENSION OF THE RULES

The rules of the House provide that legislation may be brought up on Monday and Tuesday under what is called suspension of the rules. Measures brought up under suspension are debated for only 40 minutes (twenty minutes per side) and no floor amendments are allowed. A two-thirds vote is required for passage.

During the past decade, the House has made increasing use of the suspension procedure to pass very costly and very controversial legislation, not the least of which was the Equal Rights Amendment in the 98th Congress.

The suspension procedure is an efficient means for passing legislation on which there is no great controversy. However, using the procedure for more substantive pieces of legislation flies in the face of our legislative process. In this Congress alone, nearly half of the bills the House passed were brought up under suspension of the rules.

While the suspension procedure should be controlled by the Speaker, its continual abuse cannot be tolerated. A bi-partisan committee may be necessary to screen proposals before they are made eligible for consideration under suspension. We now have committee reviewing bills on the Private Calendar and on the Consent Calendar. If there is truly overwhelming support for a bill, and no interest in offering amendments, then suspension is an appropriate procedure.

An alternative to an oversight committee would be requiring minority concurrence before any measure can be brought up under suspension.

CLEANING UP THE CONGRESSIONAL RECORD

Since 1873, the Congressional Record has been Congress' daily accounting of the debates and proceedings of the House and Senate. It is not the official record of congressional proceedings; the Journals of the House and the Senate are. From its inception, the Record has been less than a completely verbatim transcription of congressional debate.

In 1977, the House regulations governing the use of the Congressional Record were changed, thanks to the efforts of the late Congressman William Steiger of Wisconsin. Previously, Members could, by unanimous consent, enter in the Record the text of statements which they never delivered, without indication that the statement was inserted, not spoken. Obviously this left no opportunity for other Members to comment on such remarks at the time.

Since 1977, statements not spoken have been marked by typographical bullets (●). The rules change has not been entirely effective because a Member may speak only one sentence on the House floor, then receive permission to revise and extend his remarks, and the entire statement will be printed in the Congressional Record (without any bullets) as if delivered word-for-word by the Member.

It is especially important that the statements of Committee Chairmen and managers of bills, when discussing support of the legislation they bring to the Floor, be verbatim and designated as such.

The Courts and executive agencies look to those statements as the legislative history for the purposes of interpreting laws and enforcing them. There are occasions when bill managers will merely insert his language without speaking it, and therefore the House has no knowledge of what interpretation is being given the legislation.

Earlier this year, the House tabled a resolution by Rep. Daub to direct the House Rules Committee to study the issue of Congressional Record accuracy, and to report appropriate changes.

We oppose that such a study be conducted by an existing standing committee of the 99th Congress. What happens on the House Floor must be more accurately represented in the Congressional Record.

USING DISCHARGE PETITIONS

The discharge rule, originally adopted in 1910, provides a means by which House Members may bring a bill to the House floor in the absence of action by the committee of jurisdiction. The rule provides for a time consuming process by which 218 House Members must sign a petition to discharge the bill from a committee and bring a bill directly to the Floor.

The discharge petition has rarely been used successfully to bring a bill to the House floor for action over the objections of the committee.

When in today's Congress such issues as criminal law reform, immigration and a Constitutional Amendment to balance the budget are bottled up in committee by the Democratic majority, the discharge petition becomes a valuable tool. It allows rank-and-file House Members the opportunity to register their opposition to burying a measure in committee.

So concerned are the Democrats over the recent rise in the number of discharge petitions initiated (49 in the last three full Congresses alone), that they have tried to make it more difficult to achieve the 218 signatures. The Democratic Caucus considered raising the number of signatures required on a petition to discharge a constitutional amendment from a majority of the House to two-thirds of the House.

Under the precedents of the House, signatures on a motion to discharge a committee from the consideration of a bill may not be made public until the requisite number of Members (218) have signed the motion. Precedents state the discharge petition is secret because otherwise it would "bring pressure on those who have not signed the petition to sign it, and pressure upon those who have signed the petition to take their names off."

Making the signatures of Members known when the total number signing the petition reaches 100 is a fair middle ground that responds to the need for less secrecy and to concerns expressed by some about possible misuse of the legislation.

FRANKING PRIVILEGE

The term franking privilege is used to describe the authorization for a Member of Congress to mail material to constituents with-out affixing a stamp.

The current regulations issued by the House Commission on Congressional Mailing Standards permit six postal patron district-wide mailings a year, prior to 60 days immediately before the date of any primary or general election in which the Member is a candidate for public office.

There are few if any limitations on mailings to individuals, even though modern computer technology has turned this once simple exercise into a highly sophisticated communication art form.

The franking privilege is abused. It is used for political promotion rather than constituent information.

The costs of the franking privilege are too high. For FY 1984 alone, the cost was over $107 million. The taxpayers are paying the cost of keeping incumbents in office.

Franked mail is sometimes indistinquishable from campaign literature.

Reducing the total cost of the frank will help to reduce the costs of legislative branch operations. What better place to start than the $100 million for the franking privilege. The appropriation for the frank needs to be cut, especially during election years.

We propose new rules limiting a Member's personal office allowance for printing, purchasing of computer lists, and use of computers for targeted mailings. The regulations would not prohibit such disbursements, but just place a dollar cap as a means of reducing some of the abuse which now occurs. In 1984, Members of Congress are likely to send some 800 million pieces of mail under the frank.

We also propose a complete review of the use of the frank and common rule-making in the House and Senate.

Section III: Support Organizations

OTHER AGENCIES OF THE CONGRESS

The Congress currently has an alphabet soup of support organizations, the largest being the General Accounting Office (GAO), the Congressional Budget Office (CBO), the Office of Technology Assessment (OTA) and the Congressional Research Service (CRS).

Many of their activities are duplicative in nature, and particularly in the case of the Congressional Research Service, their intent and function is abused. There is a need for realignment of the agencies and less abuse of their roles.

LEGISLATIVE SERVICE ORGANIZATIONS

There has been a massive explosion of what are called legislative service organizations in the House. These organizations, range from the Mushroom Caucus to the Solar Coalition. There are now close to 100 organizations siphoning off about $2.5 million in funds allotted to individual members for their office expenses.

Some of these organizations serve an essential purpose within the leadership of both parties and among the members. However, the extent to which they consume Congressional funds, influence the legislative process and in some cases distort issues before the House, dictates that further restrictions be placed on their activities.

Section VI: The budget process

CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET REFORM

This section, unlike the others, deals with a legislative initiative. Given the pressing need for sound fiscal policy budget reform demands immediate and bi-partisan attention.

The Congressional Budget and Impoundment Control Act was enacted in 1974 as an effort to restore to Congress, and in particular the House of Representatives, its Constitutional prerogatives over the Federal Budget.

The Act was primarily the result of a historic confrontation between the Executive and Legislative branches over budgeting, in particular the systematic impoundments which were made during the Nixon Administration.

We have yet to resolve the dispute. The Budget Act has failed. We have merely institutionalized budget timetables and procedures which are not flexible enough to accommodate the political realities of the Congress. When the Act was initially instituted it was universally agreed that the Congress should have its own budget office as a means to measure the effects of its legislative proposals and that an in-Congress procedure should be developed to enable the membership to better understand the relationship of taxes to spending.

What we got was quite different. For the many years the Democratic party controlled both Houses of Congress, the Budget process was nothing more than an adding machine without a minus key. We merely added up the "wish lists" of the Democratic Chairmen and Leadership and the bottom line was the spending figure. Taxes were then increased to accommodate these huge amounts.

We believe the budget process should be changed. We ought to first determine total revenues and total outlays, and then divide up the spending pie based on that relationship. Our efforts toward this end have been rebuffed by the Democratic majority, and the rules of the House were specifically changed to prevent us from voting on the budget in this "two-step" manner.

When the two Houses of Congress came under control by different political parties in 1980, the failings of the process became more evident. After the process was used effectively for the first time in 1981 to reverse the tide of government spending, the Democrats in Congress abandoned the budget process's original purposes and used it as a vehicle of political opportunism and legislative gridlock.

The Congress spent most of its time arguing with the administration and between the two Houses over economic assumptions and legislative priorities. The timetable was no longer a method of expediting the authorization/appropriation process, but instead was an additional layer of political wrangling that ultimately delayed the Congress in completing its business before the start of the next fiscal year. What few legislative safeguards the Act contained were either waived or ignored for political expediency. The budget resolution was used not to force new spending or tax changes, but instead merely to attempt to embarrass the Administration or politically posture one party against the other.

There is widespread agreement that the Congressional budget process is in desperate need of overhaul. It seems apparent, however, that budget reform in the House, if any, next year won't be bi-partisan and won't have the best interests of sound fiscal policy at heart. If we can't reform the process next year and do it right, we ought to repeal the Budget Act and forget about Congressional budgets altogether.

It may be that only through the creation of a joint Budget Committee can the two parties and the two Houses resolve their differences and meet a timetable which results in the appropriation bills being enacted before the start of the fiscal year.

CONCLUSION

A Republican view of how the House of Representatives ought to be run is obviously a far cry from how it is currently being run under tight Democratic control.

The House has not had a fundamental change in leadership, direction or administration in three decades, and regardless of the personalities and politics involved, that kind of unbroken reign of power cannot help but produce inefficiency and abuse.

The House of Representatives is a bloated, stumbling, cumbersome and autocratic institution, and as a result the American people are not getting the kind of government they deserve.

Republicans propose substantial reductions in the number and size of committees and subcommittees; substantial reductions in funding for House operations, substantial reductions in staffing; substantial reductions in Congressional operations ranging from use of "franked" mailing privileges to satellite organizations; substantial changes in rules and procedures that would greatly improve our system of representative government, give the American people more say in what laws are passed or rejected, and allow Members of the House to exercise their rights and responsibilities with greater freedom and more influence.

Republicans believe that these institutional changes will produce better legislation and better legislators. Members of the House can and will be more productive and more accountable for their actions. Those measures the American people want the House to consider and act upon will be considered and will be dealt with in an open and effective manner.

BRIEF SUMMARY OF PROPOSED REPUBLICAN AMENDMENTS TO HOUSE RULES (99TH CONGRESS)

(1) Oversight reform—Committees would be required to formally adopt and submit to the Government Operations Committee by March 1st of the first session their oversight plans for that Congress. The Committee on Government Operations, after consultation with the Speaker and majority and minority leaders, would report the plans to the House by March 15th together with its recommendations and those of the joint leadership to assure coordination between the various committees. The Speaker would be authorized to appoint ad hoc oversight committees from the membership of two or more committees having shared jurisdiction over a particular matter. Committees would be required to include a separate oversight section in their final activity reports at the end of a Congress.

(2) Multiple referral of legislation—The joint referral of bills to two or more committees would be abolished and replaced by a system wherein the Speaker would designate a committee of principal jurisdiction. Sequential and split referral of bills would be retained.

(3) Committee elections and organization—The House would be required to elect its committees not later than five legislative days after the convening of a Congress, and committees would be required to hold their organizational meetings not later than eight legislative days after the convening of the Congress.

(4) Committee ratios—The party ratios on committees would be required to reflect the party ratios in the House (except for the Committee on Standards of Official Conduct which is bipartisan). Conference and select committees would be covered as well.

(5) Subcommittee limits—Each House committee (except Appropriations) would be limited to not more than six subcommittees, and each Member would be limited to not more than four subcommittee assignments.

(6) Proxy voting ban—All proxy voting on committees would be abolished.

(7) Majority quorums—Majority quorums would be required for the transaction of business of all committees and subcommittees.

(8) Committee documents—All committee documents and prints would require the formal approval of the committe or must carry a clear disclaimer to the contrary on their cover.

ments received from the Budget Committee on any Budget Act waivers.

(10) Committee staffing—Committee funding resolutions could not be considered until the House has first adopted a resolution reported from the Committee on House Administration setting an overall committee staff limit for the House. In the 99th Congress, this limit shall not exceed 90 percent of the committee staff employed at the end of the 98th Congress. Committee funding resolutions would be subject to a point of order if the committee staff provided for exceeded the limit set by the House.

(11) Appropriations riders—The present rule prohibiting limitation amendments to appropriations bills unless a motion to rise is defeated after other amendments are considered, would be abolished, thus permitting limitation amendments to be considered simultaneously with other amendments.

(12) Suspension of the rules—Measures could not be considered under suspension of the rules unless by direction of the committee(s) of jurisdiction or upon written request by the chairman and ranking minority member of the committee(s) of jurisdiction; no measure authorizing or enacting new budget or spending authority in excess of $50 million in any fiscal year could be considered under suspension of the rules; no measure could be considered under suspension unless advance written notice of such consideration is placed in the Record at least one legislative day prior to its consideration, along with the text of any amendments to be considered; and, in no event, could any constitutional amendment be considered under suspension.

(13) Discharge motions—Copies of discharge motions and signatures would be made available by the Clerk for public inspection at any time after 100 Members have signed the motion, and would be kept current on a daily basis.

(14) Record and committee transcripts—Verbatim accounts of floor and committee remarks would be required in the published record and made clearly distinguishable from any extensions or extraneous materials. Any substantive alternation of floor or committee verbatim accounts would be subject to investigation by the ethics committee. Members, or their designees, would still be permitted to make "technical, grammatical or typographical corrections" in their verbatim remarks.

(15) House broadcasting—A new House broadcast rule would establish a House broadcast system under the authority of the Speaker and a bipartisan, Broadcast Advisory Board (three Members from each party including the majority and minority leaders), but subject to daily supervision and operation by the Executive Committee of the Radio and Television Correspondents' Galleries The system would carry complete and unedited coverage of House proceedings, including voting, special orders, and periodic visual coverage of the entire Chamber throughout each day's proceedings, on a uniform basis. The present commercial and partisan use bans on coverage would be retained.

(16) Committee reform—The Committee on Rules would be authorized and directed to study the operation of House Rule XI regarding committee procedures and staffing, the number of subcommittees and Member subcommittee assignments, and report back its findings and recommendations to the House by resolution not later than the end of the first session of the 99th Congress.

(17) House scheduling reform—The Speaker of the House, in consultation with the majority and minority leaders, and the Rules and House Administration Committees, would be authorized and directed to study current House scheduling with a view to implementing a system of full work weeks, designated committee meeting times, fixed legislative floor schedules, and established district work periods, and report his findings not later than two months after the convening of the 99th Congress, and take all necessary steps to implement the new scheduling system at the earliest practicable date.

(18) Franking privilege—The House Commission on Congressional Mailing Standards would be authorized and directed to study the current House franking rule and regulations with a view to eliminating current abuses and excessive use of the franking privilege and reducing current franking costs by at least 10 percent, and reporting its findings and recommendations to the House not later the end of the first session of the 99th Congress.

(19) Balanced budget requirements—The House Committee on the Budget shall report a balanced budget by April 15th of each year, showing the consequences of such budget on revenues, spending, employment, interest rates and national security. "(14) In Rule XXXIV, insert the following new clause 2 and redesignate existing clauses accordingly:

"2. (a) The official reporters of the House, including stenographers of committees, shall take down a verbatim account of words spoken in the House and committee. Said verbatim account shall be printed in the Congressional Record, the committee transcript or any printed record thereof, with only such technical, grammatical, or typographical corrections as may be authorized by the Member or person delivering such remarks, or his designee.

"(b) It shall not be in order for any person to make any substantive alteration or addition to, or deletion from such verbatim account, and any violation of this rule shall be subject to investigation by the Committee on Standards of Official Conduct, either on its own initiative or upon the filing of a proper complaint pursuant to clause 4(e) of Rule X.

"(c) Notwithstanding paragraph (b), it shall be in order, if appropriate permission is granted, to extend remarks or include extraneous material in the Congressional Record, committee transcript, or any published record thereof, but any such extension or inclusion of extraneous material shall be clearly distinguished in any such document from the verbatim account by an appropriate designation of different type as shall be prescribed in regulations promulgated by the Joint Committee on Printing.".

"HOUSE BROADCASTING"

"(15)(a) At the end of the rules of the House, add the following new rule:

"RULE LI."

"BROADCAST COVERAGE OF HOUSE PROCEEDINGS."

"1. (a) There shall be a House Broadcast System (hereinafter referred to as the 'broadcast system') which shall provide complete and unedited audio and visual broadcast coverage of the proceedings in the House Chamber on a continuing basis while the House is in session, including such coverage of the Chamber while the Members are voting, of special order speeches at the end of each day's legislative business, and the periodic visual coverage of the entire House Chamber on a uniform basis throughout each day's proceedings in a manner that preserves and respects the dignity, decorum and integrity of the proceedings of the House, and the rights, reputation and conduct of its Members.

"(b) Broadcast coverage of the proceedings of the House as provided for by paragraph (a) shall not be limited or restricted in any way except as may be specifically directed in a resolution adopted by the House, or when Rule XXIX ('Secret Session') is invoked.

"(c) The responsibility for the implementation of this rule shall be vested in the Speaker, to be exercised by him in such manner (consistent with the provisions of this rule) as he determines will most effectively carry out the purposes and intent of this rule.

"(d) To assist the Speaker in this responsibility there shall be established a Broadcast Advisory Board which shall consist of the majority and minority leaders of the House and four Members to be appointed by the Speaker, two from the majority party and two from the minority party. The Speaker shall consult with such Board before making any policy decisions relating to the broadcast system.

"(e) The daily operation and supervision of the broadcast system, including the designation of its employees and the formulation of policies for the daily audio and visual coverage of the proceedings in the Chamber, shall be vested in the Executive Committee of the Radio and Television Correspondents' Galleries, subject to the direction and control of the Speaker in consultation with the Broadcast Advisory Board, and consistent with the provisions of this rule.

"(f) It shall be the general responsibility of the Clerk, under the direction and subject to the approval of the Speaker, to make provision for such coverage and to take such steps as may be necessary or appropriate for this purpose, including the purchase of equipment and compensation of the personnel of the broadcast system. The expenses incurred by the Clerk in carrying out this rule shall be paid from appropriations therefor which are hereby authorized.

"(g) The provisions of this rule shall not apply to joint sessions of the House and Senate.

"2. (a) All television and radio broadcasting stations, networks, services, and systems (including cable systems) which are accredited to the House Radio and Television Correspondents' Galleries, and all radio and television correspondents who are so accredited, shall be provided access to the live coverage of the House, consistent with the provisions of this rule.

"(b) Such access to the live coverage of the House shall also be provided to the offices of all Members and committees of the House and in such other places in the Capitol and its office buildings as the Speaker, in consultation with the Broadcast Advisory Board, deems appropriate.

"(c) Coverage made available under this rule shall not be broadcast with commercial sponsorship except as part of bona fide news and public affairs documentary programs. No part of this coverage or any recording thereof shall be used in any commercial advertisement.

"(d) No coverage provided under this rule or any recording thereof shall be used, or made available for use, as partisan campaign material to promote or oppose the candidacy of any person for elective office, whether in a paid political broadcast or otherwise; and any use of the coverage so provided shall be subject to all Federal laws relating to elections and campaign practices, and to the rules of the House.

"3. (a) The Clerk of the House shall enter into arrangements with the Librarian of Congress for the recording of the audio and visual coverage of House proceedings on a permanent basis (to the extent it is considered economically and practically feasible as determined by the Speaker in consultation with the Broadcast Advisory Board); and for making such recordings available for viewing, but not for reproduction purposes, for reference and research purposes by Members and staff of the House, students and scholars, and the general public, at convenient locations in the Library of Congress, in one of the House office buildings if deemed appropriate and necessary, and in such other places as the Speaker shall direct.

"(b) No reproduction, except for the viewing purposes described in paragraph (a), and no edited version, of any such recording shall be made available to any person by the House or by the Library of Congress except for the stated purposes provided for by this rule.".

"(b) In Rule I, strike out clause 9 in its entirety and redesignate clause "10." as clause "9.".

"COMMITTEE REFORM"

"(16) The Committee on Rules is hereby authorized and directed to conduct a thorough and complete study with respect to the operation and implementation of Rules X and XI of the Rules of the House of Representatives only insofar as they pertain to committee operations, oversight, rules and procedures, staffing, and the number of subcommittees on each committee and the number of total subcommittee assignments for each Member, with a view to strengthening and improving committee operations, oversight, rules and procedures, and to reducing committee staff, the number of subcommittees, and Member subcommittee assignments, and to report back its findings and recommendations to the House, by resolution, not later than the end of the first session of the Ninety-ninth Congress.

"HOUSE SCHEDULING REFORM"

"(17) The Speaker of the House, in consultation with the majority and minority leaders and the Committees on Rules and House Administration, is hereby authorized and directed to undertake an immediate study of House scheduling with a view toward implementing a system of full work weeks with regular and fixed periods for committee meetings and hearings, and regular and fixed periods for sessions of the House for the consideration of legislation, with preannounced short-term and long-range legislative programs for the benefit of Members and committees, as well as periodic district work periods which shall be announced at the beginning of each session. the Speaker shall report the findings and recommendations of this study to the House not later than two-months after the convening of the Ninety-ninth Congress and shall take all steps necessary and feasible for implementing such a scheduling system at the earliest practicable date, and shall refer such other matters that may require changes in House rules or regulations to the appropriate House committees of jurisdiction.

"FRANKING PRIVILEGE"

"(18) The House Commission on Congressional Mailing Standards is hereby authorized and directed to conduct a study of the current operation of House Rule XLVI ("Limitations on the Use of the Frank") with a view toward identifying any current abuse or excessive use of the franked mail privilege and shall report to the House not later than the conclusion of the first session of the Ninety-ninth Congress its findings and recommendations for any changes in current rules and regulations to curb such abuses or excessive use of the franked mail privilege and to effect cost savings, with a view to achieving a cost savings of not less than ten percentum of the franking costs incurred in the Ninety-eighth Congress."

"BALANCED BUDGET REQUIREMENT"

"(19) In Rule X, clause 1(e) is amended by adding the following new subparagraph:

"(4)(a) The Committee on the Budget shall report to the House by April 15, 1985, and by April 15 of each year thereafter, a budget that is in balance for the upcoming fiscal year, showing the consequences of such budget as they would affect the several budget functions and the economy and setting forth the effects of such budget on revenues, spending, employment, interest rates, and national security.

"(b) If the Committee on the Budget determines that a balanced budget is inappropriate for any fiscal year, it shall also report a comprehensive plan to balance the federal budget. Such plan shall include:

(1) A clear explanation of its impact on the following major categories of the budget: defense spending, non-defense discretionary spending, means-tested and non-means tested entitlement spending, interest costs, and revenues;

(2) an analysis of its impact on the major programs within each category;

(3) an analysis of its impact on each major source of revenues;

(4) a proposed timetable for its implementation.

Mr. Speaker, I am happy to yield 3 minutes to the distinguished ranking minority member of the Committee on Rules, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. QUILLEN].

Mr. QUILLEN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, there are several provisions in the package of rules changes to be offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MICHEL] which relate to the Rules Committee.

I have been the ranking Republican member of the Rules Committee for 10 years now, and with that perspective, I join in support of the amendments to the House rules offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

One of the proposals in the Michel package would be a ban on proxy voting. Proxy voting has been prohibited in the Rules Committee for years. It means that Members on both sides of the aisle are better informed when they cast their votes in committee. This is not a partisan issue. It is a good Government issue. The power to cast a vote in committee should not be delegated.

Mr. Speaker, another rules change in the package to be offered by the gentleman from Illinois directly affects the Rules Committee. It would require that all Rules Committee reports on special rules providing for the consideration of legislation include an explanation and justification of any waivers to the House rules.

Such explanations are generally provided under current practice when a rule is debated on the House floor. However, many Members who do not sit on the Rules Committee, would find it helpful to see this explanation of the waivers in advance of floor consideration. This information would be helpful to Democrats and Republicans alike.

A third proposal in the package to be offered by the gentleman from Illinois would authorize and direct the Committee on Rules to study the operation of the House regarding committee procedures and staffing. The number of subcommittees and member subcommittee assignments, and report its recommendations to the House.

This proposal for a study does not bind the House to any particular result, but it does ensure the House an opportunity to deal with the problem which arises, for example, when a Member is supposed to be in three different subcommittee meetings at the same time.

An additional related proposal in the Republican leader's package would provide that the Speaker of the House, in consultation with the majority and minority leaders and the Committees on Rules and House Administration, would be authorized and directed to study current House floor scheduling and report recommendations.

Mr. Speaker, there have been times in the past when the House floor schedule has been uncertain, even a few hours in advance. This degree of uncertainty makes it very difficult to plan in advance for meetings and functions in the district, which becomes frustrating for Members and constituents alike. We should certainly support the effort by the gentleman from Illinois to study ways to improve scheduling.

Mr. Speaker, I support the Republican leader's request to defeat the previous question, so that he may offer his complete package of improvements to the House rules.

RULES OF THE HOUSE

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE].

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I urge a vote against the previous question on the rules package, and urge my colleagues' support for Mr. MICHEL's substitute.

The Republican substitute contains a provision which will insure fairness on committees. It requires party ratios on committees to reflect the party ratios in the House. Under the proposal, the Ethics Committee would be exempt; under present House rules, that is a bipartisan committee.

Mr. Speaker, it is fundamentally unfair that representation on the committees of the House do not reflect the party ratios in the House. In the 98th Congress, the Republican Party was underrepresented on committees by 23 seats and on subcommittees by 62 seats. This effectively disenfranchises—now, listen to this—11.5 million Americans at the committee level and 31 million Americans at the subcommittee level.

The Democrats control 58 percent of the seats of the House of Representatives, but will apparently control 61 percent of the committee seats and 62 percent of the subcommittee seats. The problem will be worse in the 99th Congress than it was when the 98th Congress was organized.

On the Appropriations Committee, for example—the committee where I serve as ranking Republican—there are 35 Democratic seats and 22 Republican, for a ratio of 61 percent. This is far different than the 58 percent of the seats the Democrats control in the House. If committee size was purely representational, the Democrats would have 34 seats—not 35—and the Republicans 23—not 22.

This inequity has consistently occurred since the 88th Congress from 1963 to 1964, when the Democrats had 59 percent of the House seats, but 60 percent of committee seats. According to some research which I have done, the problem is worse in years when a Republican wins the Presidential election.

We need only look at the other body—the Republican Party does not disenfranchise Democrats on committees over there. It is simple fairness to allow proportional representation on committees in the House. I urge support for the Republican substitute to help correct this imbalance. This is the people's House. I urge my colleagues to put aside the partisanship that normally might occur in the adoption of the rules of the House, support the Michel package, and let us not undo the decision made by the American electorate on November 6.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE] has expired.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BROYHILL].

Mr. BROYHILL. Mr. Speaker, I want to comment specifically on one amendment that the Republicans would offer in their package of rules changes. This particular amendment should not be controversial; in fact, it should be termed an element of fairness in these rules.

This is an amendment that would require that party ratios on committees be close to the party ratios that exist in the House itself. In this Congress, 42 percent of the Members are Republican, and the amendment would require that 42 percent of each standing committee be Republican.

I regret to report that we are getting ready to violate this simple principle of fairness. That principle has been violated in recent Congresses; in fact in the last Congress, the Republicans were denied at least one seat on nearly every standing committee.

Mr. Speaker, I maintain this is not a partisan issue; it is not something that we are asking be done for the benefit of the Republican Party; this is for the American people. As the minority leader reported earlier today in debate, nearly 50 percent of the American people voted for Republican representation in the House of Representatives, and now we are about to organize this House of Representatives and find that those voters are going to be shortchanged with respect to representation on the important committees in the House.

Of course, all of us know it is in the committees of the House that the work is done.

I would like to insert a chart at this point in the RECORD, Mr. Speaker.

Committee	How many more seats should Republicans have gotten in the 98th Cong. in order to reach parity with Republican representation in the full House?[1]	How Many additional seats should Republicans get in the 99th Cong. in order to reach parity with Republican representation in the full House?[2]

[1] Methodology (How did Republicans fare in the 98th Congress?) Step 1: Calculate Republicans as percentage of Full House Membership (i.e., 166÷435=0.3816). Step 2: For each standing committee, calculate Republican parity by multiplying result in step 1 by number of total seats on committee and then rounding to closest whole (e.g., Energy and Commerce, 0.3816×42=16.02 or 16). Step 3: For each standing committee, determine how many additional seats Republicans should have had in the 98th Cong. by subtracting number of Republican seats in 98th Cong. from result in step 2 (e.g.) Energy and Commerce, 16−15=+1).

[2] Methodology (How should Republicans fare in the 99th Congress?) Step 1: Calculate Republicans as percentage of full House membership (i.e., 18÷435=0.4184). Step 2: For each standing committee, calculate Republican parity by multiplying result in step 1 by number of total seats on committee and then rounding to closest whole number (e.g., Energy and commerce, 0.4184 × 42= 17.57 or 18).Step 3: For each standing committee, determine how many additional seats Republicans should have in the 99th Cong. by subtracting number of Republican seats in 98th Cong. from result in step 2 (e.g., Energy and Commerce, 18−15=+3).

Important note: There is another method of calculation using the number of Democratic seats on each committee as a base which would, if used in the 98th Cong. have resulted in an increase of 30 Republican committee seats. (For the purpose of demonstrating the unfairness of the current system, we have deliberately chosen the more modest of these 2 valid methodologies.)

This shows that the Republicans, as the result of the rules that will be adopted and the ratios that will be imposed on us, will be short-changed 46 seats in this 99th Congress. I maintain this is a disservice to the political process and to the American people, and urge a no vote on the previous question.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I would like to ask a question of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. FROST], handling the resolution now for the majority leadership, on page 5, paragraph 6, in rule XVI, clause 4, strike out the words, "one-half of such time to" in the third sentence insert in lieu thereof the following: "except that on demand of the floor manager for the majority it shall be in order to debate such a motion for one hour, one-half of any debate on such motion shall" et cetera.

Now, if I understand that particular provision correctly, on a motion to recommit, on the demand of the manager of the majority, the time can be extended from the usual 10 minutes to 1 hour. Is that correct?

Mr. FROST. That is the understanding; the gentleman is correct; that is what the rule, as introduced, does provide.

Mr. LOTT. Well, what if the minority would like to have the time extended from 10 minutes to 1 hour?

Mr. FROST. Since the motion is the prerogative of the minority, whether or not to have a motion to recommit, the rule has been written that the majority then would have the decision as to the time.

You are correct; that the rule as written only gives that option to the majority.

Mr. LOTT. Well, that makes my point about this whole package of rules and rules changes.

Mr. Speaker, I want to welcome my few colleagues who have remained in the Chamber to our little biennial happy hour. For the handful of freshmen Members who have stayed on out of curiosity, it may come as a shock for you to learn that in this brief hour the House will adopt its rules of procedure for the next 2 years, with no opportunity for separate amendments or votes. But This little miracle in democracy is made possible by the Democratic caucus which predetermines in secret session what those House rules shall be, then crams their package down our throats on opening day, in what will likely be a pro forma, straight party line vote.

So for many of you, this is a rude awakening to how the world's greatest democracy and deliberative body really operates. It's not a pretty sight; it's certainly not a democratic exercise. And you can forget that little constitutional nicety about how, "each House may determine the rules of its proceedings."

The full House has little or no say in this determination as it has been predetermined by the Democrat king caucus.

On our side of the aisle, we have developed a rather comprehensive "blueprint for a House that works"—an 18-point plan for changing our rules to make the House more efficient and accountable. But our alternative rules package always gets short shrift on opening day, with no serious consideration given to it by the other side of the aisle. It is simply ignored and rejected on that party line vote I mentioned regardless of its merits.

It was not always this way. Dr. George Galloway, in his History of the House of Representatives, notes that in the late 1800's, the House would proceed for several days at the beginning of each Congress, debating, explaining, and amending the rules, "with unlimited debate until a satisfactory revision of former rules had been effected." This was not only an opportunity for all Members to have some say in shaping House rules, but also an opportunity for new Members to learn the rules.

Under this abbreviated process today, Members will not have those opportunities for explaining, debating, changing or learning the rules. As a result, few Members ever bother to learn the rules or properly use them for their benefit in committees and on the House floor. And they will be constantly amazed and even shocked at the way things are done around here as a result of those rules that are perfunctorily considered and adopted on the opening day of Congress.

Mr. Speaker, our Republican substitute, if it were given a chance for serious debate, amendment and adoption, would move this House closer to the type of deliberative, representative and accountable legislative body it should be. Our rules alternative package recognizes that at the heart of our problems in the House is the vast proliferation of subcommittees and member subcommittee assignments that has spread us so thinly that we cannot do a responsible job of legislating at the most crucial stage of the process—our committee system. Woodrow Wilson once said that the House in session is the House on public exhibition, while the House in committee is the House at work. And yet our committees and subcommittees are not working properly because there are just too many subcommittees. We now have some 146 subcommittees of our 22 standing committees, 22 percent more subcommittees than we had a decade ago. In the last Congress 198 Members had 5 or more subcommittee assignments—up 28 percent from the number of Members with that many subcommittees a decade ago. Committee staff has ballooned from 348 a decade ago to over 1,700 in the last Congress—that's over a 100-percent increase. Yet despite this growth in subcommittees and staff, our committees are reporting 20 percent fewer bills than they did a decade ago. And the quality of that legislative product is declining as well, mainly because Members cannot devote sufficient time and attention to each of their subcommittee and committee assignments. As a result, the House has adopted phantom legislative devices like proxy voting and one-third quorums to at least give the appearance that the work is being done. Moreover, the Democrats have found it necessary to pack committees with a disproportionate number of majority party Members compared to the House party ratio. In the last Congress the minority was slighted 23 committee seats and 62 subcommittee seats—effectively disenfranchising 11.5 million Americans at the committee level and 31 million Americans at the subcommittee level. Is it any wonder that the legislative bills being reported are shoddy and unrepresentative and require considerable reworking on the House floor before they can be made acceptable to a majority of the House?

Mr. Speaker, under our "blueprint for a House that works," we would limit each committee except appropriations to no more than 6 subcommittees, thus reducing by 16 the number of subcommittees we had in the last Congress. We would limit each Member to no more than four subcommittee assignments, thus eliminating some 354 subcommittee seats from the last Congress. We would reduce committee staff by at least 10 percent. We would require equitable party ratios on committees. We would eliminate proxy voting, one-third quorums, and joint referral of bills to two or more committees. We would require better oversight by our committees. And we would restore credibility and objectivity to our current partisan broadcast system by turning it over to a committee of professional broadcasters in the House.

I urge my colleagues to vote down the previous question on this resolution so that we can offer this substitute rules package. But, failing that, I would at least urge my colleagues to support our motion to commit with instructions which would require the Rules Committee to study and report on many of these issues. Let us, at the very least, make some serious effort in this Congress to make this a more workable House. Without those procedural reforms I have mentioned, we will not be able to responsibly and efficiently confront the many issues we will be expected to deal with in this 99th Congress.

Mr. Speaker, before I close debate let me summarize the procedural situation to my colleagues. In a few moments, the majority leader will close debate and move the previous question. A yes vote on that motion will terminate all debate and bring this resolution to a final vote. We are urging a "no" vote on the previous question so that we can be recognized for an additional hour of debate and offer our 19-point Republican substitute rules package.

If the previous question is adopted, however, we are still entitled to offer a motion to commit the resolution. We intend to do so with a motion committing the resolution to a select committee with instructions to report back within one legislative day with a further amendment directing the Rules Committee to study and report in three areas: budget reform, committee reform, and House broadcasting. The Rules Committee would have until June 30 of this year to report on budget reform, and until the end of the first session on committee reform and House TV.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. DANNEMEYER].

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the distinguished minority leader for yielding. His leadership in putting together a package of House rules changes that would bring equity and efficiency to our proceedings is most appreciated.

In the few moments I have, let me focus on just one of those proposed changes, the one dealing with committee and subcommittee ratios. During the 98th and previous Congresses, the custom has been the majority party dictates how many members of the minority party will serve on the committees and subcommittees of this House. House Rules have not stated, for instance, that the minority party is entitled to the same proportion of seats on the committees and subcommittees as it enjoys the full House. Some people may argue that such broad discretionary authority is an essential ingredient of the constitutional separation of powers, but in practice its exercise has done increasing violence to the constitutional principle of one man, one vote, as articulated by the Supreme Court back in 1962.

Let's look at a few figures. In the 96th Congress, in which Republicans were elected to 36.3 percent of the seats in the full House of Representatives, the GOP was given 7 less full committee and 38 less subcommittee seats than that percentage would otherwise suggest. In the 98th Congress, which was 44.14 percent Republican, the problem got worse; the GOP was granted 31 fewer full committee and 81 fewer subcommittee seats than it should have been awarded. And in the 98th Congress, which was 38.16 percent Republican, the problem persisted; after the committee and subcommittee ratios were finally determined, the House GOP found itself shorted by 23 and 62 seats respectively.

Now some of you may be thinking that's just politics. And others may wonder what difference does a committee or subcommittee seat here or there make. Well, it's politics all right, but that doesn't make it right. Nor is it fair to members of the minority party, minorities within the majority party or millions of Americans at large. After all, when the voting strength of our elected representatives is effectively diluted many people are at least partially disenfranchized and in the long run the whole system suffers.

Mr. Speaker, there are 54 democratically elected representative bodies in the western world. The U.S. Congress is one of those 54. Every single one of them, except four, divide ratios on committees and subcommittees consistent with the division of parties in the whole body.

The four exceptions are interesting.

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DANNEMEYER. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MICHEL. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I want to commend the gentleman for the part he has played up to this point in demonstrating and emphasizing the disparity of that committee ratio system. We are about to make some decisions on that within maybe the next 24–48 hours.

The gentleman's comments are very appropriate and I would certainly hope that if we have a minute or two left he be allocated that time to make the case all the more stronger.

I applaud the gentleman for all he has done in our behalf.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. I thank our leader for that comment.

Mr. Speaker, the four exceptions, the countries that do not follow the process which most people would say is fair are behind the Iron Curtain. They are Bulgaria, Romania, Poland, and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the Soviet Union.

Now, the House of Representatives, under the existing rules, is in league with those four distinguished democracies in the Western World, Bulgaria, Romania, Poland, and the Soviet Union.

We, by our Republican set of rules here today, seek to place the House of Representatives on the side of the vast majority of democratically elected bodies in the Western World that divide committees and subcommittees consistent with the division of the parties in the whole body.

I hope that my colleagues in the House will reflect on this because it is a very significant vote.

The U.S. Senate, the other body, historically, no matter which party has controlled that body, apportions committee slots based on the division of the two great parties in the entire body, whether the Democrats were running it or the Republicans were running it, it made no difference. That is what we are asking for the House here today.

Probably what this vote illustrates is something I think that every American voter must come to understand. The most important vote that any of us casts in the whole 2-year term is the first one. It is the one that elects the Speaker here of the House of Representatives, because on this issue—if you come here as a member of the majority party, the Democrat party—your leadership is going to tell you:

> Friend, you may desert the farm on certain matters of substance of particular interest to your district, but one thing you don't dare do is desert our farm on the basis of procedure, that is on party questions. When the party wants to stop the minority you better join with us or we will abandon you in the next election in your ability to come back here and continue to be a Member of this distinguished body.

The Democrats have done very well at this. This chart may enlighten my colleagues. In the 1982 election Republicans for Congress nationwide received 44 percent of the vote for the House of Representatives. Because of malapportionment among State legislative bodies around the country, we received 38 percent of the slots in the House of Representatives.

After the Democratic leadership got through with us, having received 38 percent of the slots in the House, we got 35.6 percent and 35.5 percent of the slots on committees and subcommittees respectively, and we received 15 percent of the slots on the staff of those committees, and similarly in the 97th Congress and the 96th Congress.

In the 1984 election, American voters said that they wanted Republicans to constitute about 49 percent of this House. By malapportionment of State legislatures around the country, we Republicans have received about 42 percent of the slots in this House, and if the pattern of the last 3 Congresses is carried out in the 99th Congress, the current Congress, we Republicans can expect 4 or 5 percentage points less in slots for committees and subcommittees.

Well, what does all this mean to the people of this country? Are we just talking partisan games here? I seek to illustrate in the brief time that I have how significant this issue of committee ratios is in terms of its impact on votes of significance to the American people.

Take, for instance, what has happened in the full committees of the House in the not-too-distant past. By one vote, the Appropriations Committee approved a rescission of funding for the construction of a nuclear powered aircraft carrier. By one vote, the Energy and Commerce Committee approved a continuation of price controls on natural gas. And by one vote, the Foreign Affairs Committee removed restrictions on U.S. arms sales to Turkey. Now one cannot say for sure what would have happened if there had been one more Republican on each of these committees. But, in addition to speculating, one can say that Republicans had had less seats than they should have had on all of these committees in the 98th Congress, on two of the three committees in the 97th Congress, and on Appropriations in the 96th Congress.

Worse yet, it seems as if the situation is deteriorating. Take, for example, what has occurred on the Energy and Commerce Committee. In the 96th Congress, to which 159 Republicans were elected, the GOP was given 15 of the 42 full committee seats and one-third of the subcommittee seats. But, in the 98th Congress, to which 166 Republicans were elected, GOP Members were still given only 15 full committee seats and, even more to the point, received only 31.1 percent of all the subcommittee seats. So much for the GOP's electoral gain from the 96th to the 98th Congress.

The rationale for this regression from fair representation is that working majority is needed on the committees and subcommittees to enhance their functioning. But my collegues on the other side of the aisle already have a majority according to my count, so why should it be further enhanced? Could it be that the leadership of the majority party isn't all that certain all of its own Members will go along with their policies? Maybe there is some other explanation but I am hard pressed to find it which leads me, and I hope most other Members of this House, to conclude that this isn't just a partisan issue. It's really a bipartisan issue that strikes, or should strike, near and dear to the heart of practically every Member of this House. For who knows when a Member—any Member—might find him or herself in a position where the party as well as the individual makeup of a committee or subcommittee may spell the difference between victory and defeat on an issue of vital interest to that Member's constituency.

The rules package being offered by the minority today would solve this problem of creeping underrepresentation in a simple and straightforward fashion. Except for the Committee on Standards of Official Conduct, which would continue to be governed by rule X, clause 6(a)(2) which specifically establishes its party ratio, the minority package provides for committees and subcommittees to be constituted in the same proportion as the political parties are represented in the full House of Representatives. Thus, if Republicans won 40 percent of the seats in a congressional election, they would be entitled to 40 percent of the seats on all full committees and on all subcommittees in the subsequent Congress. Similarly, if the Democrats won 40 percent, they would get 40 percent representation on all full and subcommittees. Certainly, there is precedent for such a step. Not only does almost every other nation with a representative form of government use proportional representation on its legislative committees, but the fact that the Committee on Standards of Official Conduct has been required to have a 50–50 ratio makes it clear that we can do the same.

There is, however, one small obstacle in the way of taking such an equitable step today. And that is the motion for the previous question which will be offered at the conclusion of debate on the rules. For this proposal to be considered, the previous question must be defeated. Now I realize that this doesn't happen often but I am hopeful that today will be an exception. For the reasons I have stated, and for the future of representative government in this country, adoption of rules that will end systematic underrepresentation on committees and subcommittees of this House is a must. Therefore, I urge my colleagues to vote accordingly when the previous question is moved. Only then can we see if the majority party really means what it said all last fall about being the party concerned about fairness.

Methodology: Use the number of Democratic slots on each committee as a base. In all cases, compute the proper ratio on the basis of the party split in the House of Representatives at the time of organization. The five non-voting Members are not included in this calculation, but they are included in committee counts, where applicable, because they do vote in committee.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I be permitted to include extraneous material with my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, a careful look at the current state of the House will reveal the need for a thoroughgoing reform of this institution. Despite the proliferation in subcommittees, assignments, the staff over the last decade, we are reporting fewer bills with less care and attention. We are muscle bound and overextended. It's high time we recognized that this is a House out of order, and that what is needed is a new blueprint for a House that works. At this point in the RECORD, Mr. Speaker, I include a fact sheet on current House problems and a brief summary of how Republican substitute House rules package would address these problems.

The fact sheet and summary follow:

FACT SHEET ON THE PROBLEMS OF A HOUSE OUT OF ORDER AND THE REPUBLICAN BLUEPRINT FOR A HOUSE THAT WORKS

(Proposed House Rules Changes for the 99th Congress)

CURRENT PROBLEMS IN THE HOUSE

Legislative Productivity: A decade ago, in the 93rd Congress (1973–74), House committees reported 906 public bills and joint resolutions, the House passed 923 such public measures, and 649 were enacted into law; in the 98th Congress (1983–84), 734 such measures were reported from House committees (a 19% decrease from the 93rd Congress), 978 measures were passed by the House (a 5.6% increase), and 623 were enacted into law (a 4% decrease);

Subcommittee Proliferation: In the 93rd Congress the House had 21 standing committees with 119 subcommittees; in the 98th Congress the House had 22 standing committees and 146 subcommittees—a 22 percent increase in subcommittees; 10 House committees currently have more than six subcommittees;

Member Subcommittee Assignments: In the 93rd Congress there were 1,642 subcommittee seats, and 154 Members had five or more subcommittee assignments; in the 98th Congress there were 1,721 subcommittee seats (a 5% increase from the 93rd Congress), and 198 Members had five or more subcommittee assignments (a 28% increase from the 93rd Congress);

Committee Staff Proliferation: In the 93rd Congress, House committees had 848 committee staff; in the 98th Congress committees had 1,732 committee staff—a 104% increase; the ratio of committee staff to committee members in the 93rd Congress was 1 to 1; the ratio in the 98th Congress was 2.1 to 1;

Party Ratios on Committees: In the 98th Congress the minority party was underrepresented on committees by 23 seats, and on subcommittees by 62 seats—effectively disenfranchising 11.5 million Americans at the committee level and 31 million Americans at the subcommittee level;

Proxy Voting: In the 93rd Congress the House voted to abolish proxy voting in committees, but it was restored on the first day of the 94th Congress before it could take effect; in the 98th Congress, 18 of the 22 standing committees permitted proxy voting;

One-third Committee Quorums: In the 95th Congress, the House adopted a rule permitting committees to transact all business (except reporting measures) with only one-third of their members present; in the 98th Congress, 15 of the 22 standing committees had rules permitting one-third quorums;

Multiple Referral of Legislation: In the 93rd Congress, the House adopted a rule to permit bills to be considered by more than one committee; a study in the 95th Congress revealed that such multiple-referred bills consume four times as much meeting and hearing time as singly-referred bills, yet have half the chance of being reported from committees, and more than three times less chance of being passed by the House;

Oversight: In the 93rd Congress it was estimated that House committees and subcommittees spent only 1.1 percent of their time reviewing existing laws, programs and agencies within their jurisdiction; while a survey in the 96th Congress revealed that committees were spending more time on oversight, 77 percent of the Members surveyed felt committees were still doing an inadequate oversight job; and while a rule adopted in the 93rd Congress required committees to publish their oversight agendas at the beginning of each Congress, and all have done so, none of the committees require formal adoption of the agenda (this has been largely a staff operation), and there are no means of assuring implementation or accountability;

House Broadcasting: In the 96th Congress, the House began public broadcast coverage of its floor proceedings under a system owned and operated by the House and controlled by the Speaker; in the 98th Congress, the Speaker unilaterally altered the camera coverage policy during special order speeches to show the nearly empty Chamber in an attempt to embarrass minority party Members making speeches; further restrictions are now being considered by the Democratic Caucus to further curtail minority party speeches and limit their exposure over the broadcast system.

THE REPUBLICAN BLUEPRINT FOR A HOUSE THAT WORKS

Subcommittee Reductions: All House committees (except Appropriations) would be limited to no more than six subcommittees; this would result in the elimination of 16 subcommittees from the 98th Congress—an 11% reduction;

Reduction in Member Subcommittee Assignments: All Members would be limited to no more than four subcommittee assignments; this would result in the elimination of 354 subcommittee seats—a 20% reduction;

Committee Staff Reductions: The House would be required to establish an overall committee staff ceiling each year before committee funding resolutions could be considered; the ceiling for the 99th Congress would have to be 10% less than the total committee staff in the 98th Congress;

Proxy Voting Ban: All proxy voting in committees would be abolished;

Majority Quorums on Committees: A majority of committee members would have to be present for the transaction of any business;

Limit on Multiple Referral of Bills: The joint referral of bills to two or more committees would be eliminated;

Equitable Party Ratios: Party ratios on committees would have to reflect the party ratio in the House;

Oversight: Committees would be required to formally adopt their oversight agendas in each Congress and would be held accountable for them in their final activity reports;

House Broadcasting: Full coverage of House proceedings would be required, including voting, special order speeches, and periodic views of the entire Chamber; the daily operation of the broadcast system, camera coverage policies, and the supervision of broadcast personnel would be turned over to a committee of professional broadcasters covering the Congress.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GEKAS].

Mr. GEKAS. I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, much has been said about this evil of proxy voting in committees, and I am here to subscribe to the condemnation of that procedure. In the Judiciary Committee in the 98th Congress, when the minority advanced a sound proposal for reform of the insanity defense, it was rejected by virtue of a proxy voting pattern established in the subcommittee in which this proposal was formulated.

Now, what was wrong with that was that that particular vote was taken very early in the session and the minority, who offered it, proved that it was correct when in the final stages of the 98th Congress a true reform of the insanity defense was actually passed by this House and by the Senate in exactly the same form in which the minority, during the committee process, offered it. It was the mean-spirited proxy voting that canceled out our chance to have reform of the insanity defense early in the session and avoid that last-minute rush that finally saw some reform come to this important facet of the law.

But beyond that, at one point, the subcommittee of which I was a member, offered an amendment that would have brought for the first time in a generation the death penalty as a proper penalty for certain homicides, including assassination of the President of the United States, into the Federal law process.

What happened? It was defeated in subcommittee by virtue of proxy votes. Now that cannot be tolerated by the American public. The American public is confused by the maze of rules and procedures that we have on the floor of the Congress, as are Members of the Congress itself, but there is one thing that the public will understand: That they want their elected Representatives in committee to vote in their own presence, in their own voice, and out of their own convictions. They do understand the evil of having somebody grant a piece of paper to somebody else to vote for them.

Vote against the previous question.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALKER].

Mr. WALKER. I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I would join my colleague from Pennsylvania and the others who have risen in asking the House to vote down the previous question, and I think there is a specific issue that you ought to be aware of that is in the Republican package. That is the issue of balanced budget.

In the last couple of weeks of the previous session of Congress, we had a vote on this floor that suggested as a portion of that vote that what we ought to have is a balanced budget proposal reported by the Budget Committee each year. At that point it was a meaningless gesture; it was an election fraud. It was an attempt by people here to demonstrate to the country that they had done something on balanced budget. It was not real.

Today, you have got a chance to do something real. You have got a chance to include in the rules of the House a proposal that says that the Budget Committee shall each year report a balanced budget resolution. Not as the only resolution, but as one of the options that we would be given each year. A balanced budget resolution.

You have a chance of voting that way if you defeat the previous question. If you do not defeat the previous question, there will be no vote and you are going to hear more about it in the future. I do not want to kid anybody; this is a vote you are going to hear about in the future. Those of you who have talked about balanced budgets in your district and balanced budgets as a part of what we do in Washington are going to hear more about your vote if you do not vote to defeat the previous question, because we intend to use it. We intend to say that when you were given a choice between voting for the rules of the House or voting for a balanced budget, you chose the Speaker's rules.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. LAGOMARSINO].

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to vote to defeat the previous question. Only by defeating the previous question, will this House be allowed to even consider the substitute rules resolution being offered by the Republican leader, Mr. MICHEL. This substitute—which we have entitled: "Blueprint for a House That Works"—is a carefully constructed package of rules changes designed to reduce the number—and costs—of House subcommittees; require fair minority party representation on all committees; prevent abuse of House rules; and provide more public accountability and openness in the House. It is something that every Member of this House should at least hear and consider.

A vote for the previous question, is a vote to cutoff debate and prevent even the discussion of these important proposals for House reform. Therefore, I hope that every Member will agree to allow these ideas to be aired.

Why do we feel these changes are needed?

They are needed, frankly, because the public image of this body is a disaster. Under the current rules, this House, the people's legislature, has become a bloated, bumbling and autocratic institution in the minds of many people. There are many reasons why this is so. Perhaps it is the 163 standing committees and subcommittees now crowding our Halls. Perhaps it is the 2,000-plus staff positions on those committees—a 76-percent increase in the past decade. Perhaps it is the fact that in the past 2 years alone, the House has created 59 new subcommittee seats—for a grant total of over 1,700. Perhaps it is the proliferation and confusion of jurisdiction that all these subcommittees have created. Why do we need, for example, 22 different committees and subcommittees with jurisdiction over energy issues? No wonder we can never pass any bills in this area.

Five years ago, a survey of House Members showed that 81 percent felt the number of subcommittees should be reduced, and that the number of subcommittees on which a Member can serve should be limited to a rational and manageable level. Yet in those 5 years, the number in both cases has grown, not reduced. It's become a standing joke in the House that if you pass a Democrat in the hall, you should automatically address them as Mr. or Madame Chairman, because there are so many committees and subcommittees in the House that just about every Democrat chairs one. That's only a slight exaggeration.

With this proliferation has come a diffusion of responsibility and responsiveness. Members serve on so many subcommittees they can't attend all the meetings. Committee staff make important decisions in their absence. Proxies have become commonplace.

This growth has also come at the expense of fairness. Virtually all the new seats, and staff, have been on the majority side. The Energy and Commerce Committee, for example, currently employs 109 investigative staff; only 9 of them are assigned to the minority. In the 97th Congress, Republicans held 44 percent of the seats in the House, but were assigned only 14.6 percent of the committee staff. With staff assuming so many important functions in the drafting of bills and reports and conduct of hearings, Republicans are severely handicapped in advancing their views and positions.

Membership on committees reflects a similar distortion. The ratio of Republicans to Democrats on the Ways and Means Committee is 34 percent. On Education and Labor, it's 29 percent. On Rules and House Administration, it's 30 percent. This is a violation of the one-man, one-vote concept enunciated by the Supreme Court 22 years ago. The proportion of Republicans to Democrats on House committees should reflect the proportion of Republicans to Democrats in the House as a whole. Democrats also refuse to allow committee Republicans to participate in drafting of committee reports. This systematic suppression of minority views and voting strength on committees deprives millions of Americans who elected Republican Representatives their fair voice in Congress.

There are other problems with the current House rules. Scheduling is an abomination. Bills are marked-up in committees with only one-third of the members present. Rules are routinely waived or ignored. Transcripts are altered. Even the House TV system, which is controlled by the Democrats, is turned off during floor votes.

The rules changes we propose would open up the House to public view and restore public confidence. They would require verbatim transcripts of committee and floor action. They would ban proxy voting and require full quorums in committees. They would restore committee ratios and reduce the number of subcommittees and staff. And they would turn the House TV system over to a committee of journalists, with full and unedited coverage of House proceedings.

Unless we take steps now to clean up our House, public disenchantment will only grow worse. Americans are a fair-minded people. They are willing to pay for a fair system of government. But they are not willing to subsidize wasteful extravagance or deliberate unfairness. We need to discuss these problems now, before the new rules are adopted. if we put it off, it will never occur. I urge my colleagues on both sides of the aisle to vote against the previous question and allow us to begin discussions now on ways to reform.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, the resolution before the House is the product of a great deal of study by a committee of the Democratic Caucus; it is recommended by the Democratic Caucus, and I would urge all Members to vote in favor of ordering the previous question.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FROST. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

Mr. Speaker, many of us, I assume all of us on this side as on the other side, are very concerned about this matter of equitable party ratios, and assuring that the ratio of Republicans to Democrats on the committees are indicative of appropriate representation.

While sitting here, I have done some calculation so that it might be somewhat clearer to my colleagues. Let me tell you how I have done it. As has been said by gentlemen on the minority side, the majority party, the Democratic Party now has 58 percent of the House. There are 35 Democrats on the 57-member Appropriations Committee. That gives the Democrats not 58 percent, but 61 percent of that committee, which is a 3-percent discrepancy.

On the Rules Committee, that discrepancy is 11 percent. On Ways and Means, that discrepancy favoring the Democrats is 6 percent. The gentleman from California, in his illuminating recitation of other countries that do not follow ratios precisely, mentioned that the only other countries that do not do it are behind the Iron Curtain.

□ 1700

I do not know why they do not do it, but I do know why this House has historically not done it. Because of the vagaries of the basic, traditional rules which govern this House, because of the wide political, social, and economic fabric that comprises the American quilt, and, of course, our representation in this House reflects the threads of that quilt, and finally, because there are 435 of us in this large Chamber, we are required to have some authoritarian, workable control within the major committees.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not have the time.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. The gentleman mentioned me.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Perhaps the gentleman from Texas, after I have finished my remarks, would be yield to the gentleman, but I ask the gentleman from Texas to let me finish my remarks first.

Yes; we need a system which assures full authority to the majority in this House, to be able to run this House and run the people's business of this House, and we need a system which assures full protection for the minority in this House.

As one goes back to determine how the Republicans have done it when they have been in the majority and how the Democrats do it when we are in the majority, here is what one finds:

The last time your party controlled this House was a third of a century ago, in the 83d Congress. The discrepancy that you had on the three committees, the ratios about which you are now objecting, Appropriations, Rules, and Ways and Means, the percentage discrepancy was 11 percent the last time you controlled the House. We recommend that that discrepancy only be 6.7 percent. I think that the rules and the ratio is particularly fair, considering what you did the last time you were in the majority.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FROST. No; the minority has had its 30 minutes. The gentleman does not yield any additional time to the minority.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore [Mr. KILDEE]. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 238, nays 176, not voting 19, as follows:

FAMILY FARM AND RANCH OPPORTUNITY ACT

(Mrs. SMITH of Nebraska asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks and include extraneous matter.)

Mrs. SMITH of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the Family Farm and Ranch Opportunity Act, which I have introduced today. For the benefit of my colleagues in the House, I submit herewith for the record the text of my bill.

Farmers and ranchers in Nebraska and all across the country are currently experiencing the most critical economic crisis situation since the Great Depression of the 1930's. Frustration grows daily as desperate families cling to the only lifestyle they have ever known. Crisis hotlines, food pantries, and farm crisis action groups are springing up throughout the Nation in an attempt to deal with the emotional stress, physical needs, and financial difficulties of growing numbers of farm families.

Literally thousands of farmers and ranchers in Nebraska alone may be forced from the land in the next 12 months. The underlying causes of this agricultural depression are diverse and may have their origin in the ill-conceived U.S. fiscal policies of the late 1970's.

Among the most severe problems facing family farms and ranches today are high real interest rates, high production costs, low commodity prices—below the cost of production in many cases, rapidly declining land values, stagnant export markets, and excessive debt loads.

Agriculture is going through a very painful transition today, and the prospect of large-scale land transfers due to foreclosures and other liquidation proceedings looms on the horizon.

Should this occur, especially in the already hard-hit Midwestern States, a situation unequalled since the Great Depression could ensure. As farmers and ranchers are forced to sell out, land will flood the market, further depressing land values and in turn forcing still others into foreclosure due to their lowered security values. Rural communities would face a severe loss of business activity and even population in a relatively short time period.

Only a general improvement in the agricultural economy with lower interst rates and improved commodity prices can solve this problem. Such drastic improvement in the short term is unlikely. If a depression-like situation is to be avoided, something must be done in the short term to keep farmers on the land and land off the market.

I propose a plan called the Family Farm and Ranch Opportunity Act that applies to both private sector and Government loans to farmers and ranchers. This bill would enable farmers and ranchers faced with foreclosure of their farm loans to continue their farm or ranch operation. First, upon initiation of foreclosure proceedings on FmHA farm loans, the farmer may transfer the deed to the farm along with the outstanding loan obligation, to Farmers Home Administration. FmHA then leases the land back to the farmer or rancher for a period not to exceed 5 years.

Rent paid by the farmer to the Government consists of a 50-50 crop share. 50 percent is farmed with the proceeds going to the farmer, and 50 percent is idled. The Government's share is idled to conserve the soil and to prevent it from contributing to production of surplus commodities.

At the end of the lease, title to the land is returned to the farmer or rancher as well as the remaining loan obligation. If the farmer or rancher is not able or willing to resume ownership and payments, the land is offered for lease to a beginning farmer or rancher, under the same conditions, with the option to buy at the end of the 5 years.

A second section applies to private-sector loans to agriculture. This section authorizes the FmHA to lease farmland aquired by other lenders through foreclosure or abandonment. The second section is similar to the first, except that beginning farmers or ranchers leasing land that the FmHA has acquired from other lenders will pay as rent ⅓ of the proceeds from the sale of commodities produced on the farm and must participate in any appropriate farm program in effect at the time.

The intent of this bill is multifaceted. First of all it is to ease pressure on land prices by keeping land off the market. Second, it is to keep farmers on their farms. We face losing many good farmers and ranchers which would not only change the face of agriculture, but would be devastating to small towns and businesses. Finally, the vital Farm Credit System will be strengthened.

My bill would give farmers a chance (5 years) to get on their feet so they can resume loan payments and would provide opportunity, other than inheritance, for beginning farmers and ranchers to get started. To preserve rural America as we know it, we must have opportunities for young farmers.

This plan would prevent land vacated during this crisis from ending up in the hands of the largest farmers and the land speculators. It would provide for soil conservation, reduce production of surplus commodities, reduce the number of displaced and unemployed farmers and ranchers, and strengthen agriculture in general, our most productive source of trade dollars.

These measures, although imperfect, would provide one mechanism or safety net to prevent an exodus from the land and ruination of agribusinesses dependent on farmers, in the event of a continuation of the current agricultural economic crisis.

This bill would not solve all the problems of agriculture, but would offer some relief from the current crisis and give farmers time to adjust, recover, and survive until the farm economy improves.

The text of H.R. — follows:

51-059 O-86-14 (Pt. 1)

A bill to assist distressed farmers, protect farmland values, preserve family farms, provide opportunities for beginning farmers, encourage soil conservation, and reduce production of surplus commodities

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as "The Family Farm and Ranch Opportunity Act".

SEC. 2. (a) For purposes of this Act—

(1) the term "acreage base of the county" means the number of acres which is equal to the aggregate of the acreage bases of all farms in the county;

(2) the term "beginning farmer" means any person who, as of the time that an application is submitted to the Farmers Home Administration for a farm lease under this Act—

(A) has never engaged in full-time farming; or

(B) has engaged in full- or part-time farming as an owner or operator, but for not more than an aggregate of 10 years;

(3) the term "crop share basis" means a lease agreement in which the Federal Government has a 50 percent ownership interest in all commodities produced on farmland leased back under this Act, or the income derived from the sale of such commodities;

(4) the term "farmland" means any real property used for agricultural purposes;

(5) the term "loan" means any loan secured by real property used for agricultural purposes; and

(6) the term "Secretary" means the Secretary of Agriculture.

(b) In order to enable farmers who received loans from the Farmers Home Administration to continue operation of farms in which they have an ownership interest, upon the initiation of foreclosure proceedings with respect to such loans, the Secretary, acting through the Farmers Home Administration, shall—

(1) upon request by the farmer, accept a transfer of a deed to any farmland which secures such loan which is being forclosed;

(2) accept a transfer of the outstanding obligation to repay such loan if such loan is insured or guaranteed by the Farmers Home Administration; and

(3) manage the property received as the result of such transfer in accordance with subsection (c).

(c)(1) The Secretary shall, in accordance with paragraph (2), lease the farmland received as a result of a transfer under this section back to the person from whom the transfer occurred.

(2)(A) Such lease shall be for a period not to exceed five years and shall provide, subject to subparagraph (B), that the lessee may put 50 percent of the farmland leased in production, and shall maintain the remaining 50 percent of the farmland using soil conservation practices. Farmland not put in production and maintained using soil conservation practices as a result of the operation of the preceding sentence shall be considered part of the acreage base of the farm for any program carried out by the Secretary for any period during which the lease is in effect.

(B) When the Secretary determines that the amount of farmland being held out of production and maintained using soil conservation practices as a result of the operation of subparagraph (A) is equal to 20 percent of the acreage base of the county, the Secretary shall not enter into additional lease agreements which require holding farmland out of production until the amount of farmland being held out of production is below such 20 percent level and the additional lease will not raise such amount above such 20 percent level. Lease agreements entered into under this section after such 20 percent level is reached shall be on a crop share basis.

(D) With respect to rangeland leased back under the provisions of this Act, the lessee shall obtain a recommendation from the Soil Conservation Service as to the maximum stocking level for the rangeland based on the condition of such land. Such rangeland shall not be stocked at more than 50 percent of the maximum stocking level recommended by the Soil Conservation Service.

(d)(1) Upon the expiration of the period of the lease the Secretary shall transfer ownership of the farmland accepted by the Secretary pursuant to subsection (b), back to the lessee if—

(A) the lessee—

(i) informs the Secretary that the lessee is willing and able to resume ownership of the farmland;

(ii) accepts the obligation to repay an amount equal to the unpaid principal on such farmland on such terms and at the original rate of interest, or at the rate of interest prevailing at the expiration of the lease, whichever rate is lower; and

(B) the Secretary determines that the lessee is able to resume ownership of the farmland with the remaining loan obligation.

(2) If the lessee—

(A) fails to inform the Secretary as provided under paragraph (1)(A)(i);

(B) is unable to resume ownership of the farmland; or

(C) desires to end the lease agreement before the end of the lease period;

then the Secretary shall lease the farmland to a beginning farmer. The lease to a beginning farmer shall be on the terms provided in subsection (c)(2). If upon expiration of the term of the lease such beginning farmer does not purchase the farmland, the Secretary shall lease the farmland to another beginning farmer. If upon expiration of the term of the lease the second beginning farmer does not purchase the farmland, the Secretary shall not lease the farmland again, and shall dispose of the farmland in accordance with subsection (g).

(e) Application for a lease as a beginning farmer under this Act shall be made to the county committee of the Farmers Home Administration. Selection of the beginning farmer shall be made by the Secretary taking into consideration the recommendations of the county committee. In reviewing applications for leases under this Act the county committees shall give—

(1) priority to beginning farmers who have not attained the age of 40 years and who have a net worth of less than $100,000, as determined by the county committee; and

(2) consideration to the viability of the farming operation proposed by the applicant.

(f) The Secretary may subdivide a farm acquired under this section if the Secretary determines that—

(1) the farm is too large to be operated by a beginning farmer (and members of such farmer's family who are related by blood or marriage, as defined by the Secretary, including individuals adopted by the farmer, and members of the farmer's household for whom the farmer is a legal guardian), and less than the equivalent of one additional full-time laborer; and

(2) it would be economically feasible for the beginning farmer to operate a smaller unit of the farm if the farm were subdivided into smaller units.

(g) If no beginning farmer applies for a lease under this section, or if at the end of the lease period for the second beginning farmer, such farmer does not purchase the farmland, the Secretary shall offer such farmland for sale; except that the Secretary may not sell any farmland acquired under this section if, in the State where such farmland is located, the average of the market values of farmland in such State is determined to be in a downward trend. The farmland held by the Farmers Home Administration as a result of the operation of the preceding sentence shall be held out of production and shall be maintained using soil conservation practices until—

(1) with respect to farmland which has not been leased to a second beginning farmer, an application for a lease of the farmland is approved for a beginning farmer; or

(2) with respect to farmland which was not purchased by the second beginning farmer, farmland values have stabilized in the State where such farmland is located, based on the latest information and statistics available to the Secretary.

SEC. 3. (a) The Secretary, acting through the Farmers Home Administration, shall lease farmland on request from any lender (including any Federal or State chartered bank, savings and loan association, cooperative lending organization, or other legally organized lending organization, or governmental agency, or guarantor of farm real estate mortgage loans) that has acquired such farmland through foreclosure or abandonment. The Secretary shall lease such land at rates prevailing in the area where such land is located. The term of such lease shall not exceed 15 years. Any lease agreement entered into between the Secretary and any lender under this section shall include such terms as may be necessary to allow the Secretary to sublease the land in accordance with this section, and shall include an option for the Secretary, or any sublessee that the Secretary may designate, to purchase such farmland.

(b) The farmland leased by the Secretary pursuant to this section shall be offered for sublease on a first refusal basis to the person who had an ownership interest in such farmland immediately before the lender acquired it, if the Secretary, in cooperation with the lender, determines that such person is able to maintain a financially viable operation. Such sublease shall be on the terms provided in subsection (c)(2) of section 2 of this Act.

(c)(1) If at the end of any sublease period the sublessee informs the Secretary that the sublessee is willing and able to purchase the farmland, the Secretary shall exercise the option to purchase contained in the Secretary's lease with the lender.

(2)(A) If the person to whom the sublease is offered under subsection (b) does not sublease the farmland, of if the Secretary determines that such person is unable to maintain a financially viable operation; or

(B) if after subleasing such farmland such sublessee—

(i) fails to inform the Secretary as provided in paragraph (1);

(ii) is unable to purchase the farmland; or

(iii) desires to end the sublease agreement before the end of the sublease period;

then the Secretary shall, in cooperation with the lender, sublease the farmland to a beginning farmer.

(3) The sublease to a beginning farmer shall be for a period not to exceed five years and shall provide that the sublessee—

(A) must participate in any program carried out by the Secretary for any period during which the sublease is in effect;

(B) use approved conservation practices with respect to such farmland; and

(C) pay to the Secretary, as rent for the use of the farmland—

(i) one-third of the value of the agricultural commodity produced on such farmland; or

(ii) with respect to livestock, one-third of the value added to any livestock raised and maintained on such farmland.

(4) At the end of the sublease period the beginning farmer must be willing and able to purchase the farmland from the lender at its fair market value or the farmland will be subleased to another beginning farmer. If upon expiration of the term of the sublease such beginning farmer does not purchase the farmland, the Secretary shall sublease the land to another beginning farmer. If upon expiration of the term of the sublease the second beginning farmer does not purchase the farmland, the Secretary shall not sublease the farmland again, and shall dispose of the farmland in accordance with subsection (f).

(d) Selection of the beginning farmer for a sublease under this section shall be made as provided in subsection (e) of section 2 of this Act.

(e) The Secretary may subdivide a farm leased under this section if the Secretary determines that—

(1) the farm is too large to be operated by a beginning farmer (and members of such farmer's family who are related by blood or marriage, as defined by the Secretary, including individuals adopted by the farmer, and members of the farmer's household for whom such farmer is a legal guardian), and less than the equivalent of one additional full-time laborer; and

(2) it would be economically feasible for the beginning farmer to operate a smaller unit of the farm if the farm were subdivided into smaller units.

(f) If no beginning farmer applies for a sublease under this section, the Secretary may—

(1) renegotiate the terms of the lease with the lender in order to terminate the Federal Government's obligations under the lease;

(2) sublease the land to any person at prevailing local rates and on such additional terms and conditions as the Secretary determines are appropriate; or

(3) remove the farmland from production and maintain such farmland using soil conservation practices if the Secretary determines that to do so will protect farmland values in the area, will reduce surplus production, or will promote conservation.

DEPOSITORY INSTITUTIONS ACT OF 1985

(Mr. WYLIE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks and include extraneous matter.)

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Speaker, today I have introduced legislation designed to update this Nation's financial services laws; laws which have stood largely unaltered for 50 years and are badly in need of updating and reform.

The Depository Institutions Act of 1985 is a comprehensive bill which recognizes the new competitive realities between financial services providers and permits a flexible structure so that competition can increase in the future. Nonetheless, the bill retains safety as the watchword of our Nation's financial system.

I think most objective observers will find it a realistic and sound approach to a complex and ever-changing business.

I look forward to working with my good friend, Chairman ST GERMAIN, and the rest of my colleagues on the Banking Committee and in the House as a whole to see that this Congress passes this type of legislation this year before it is too late for us to have some say in setting the Nation's policy on financial services.

Mr. Speaker, I include in the RECORD a discussion and section-by-section analysis of the bill.

The statement follows:

STATEMENT OF HON. CHALMERS P. WYLIE, DEPOSITORY INSTITUTIONS ACT OF 1985—JANUARY 3, 1985

Mr. Speaker, today I introduced the Depository Institutions Act of 1985. This is legislation that I have been developing since the 98th Congress adjourned in response to many of the issues confronting this Nation's depository institutions.

Depository institutions are vital to the continued growth and stability of our Nation's economy. It is my desire to ensure that a strong, stable, and competitive system is in place that meets the financing needs of all segments of our economy well into the future. Above all else, Congress does have the ultimate responsibility to protect and defend the safety and soundness of banks and thrifts across the country.

For the past fifty years, our financial service system was protected by a comprehensive framework of Federal laws which, among other things, separated commercial banking from other forms of commerce and provided stringent Federal supervision of financial institutions. However, within the past few years, this framework has been breached, not by Congressional action, but instead through aggressive exploitation of loopholes in our banking laws. This development has led to the acquisition of so-called "nonbank" banks by nonfinancial concerns, ranging from insurance and securities firms to furniture stores. In many cases, these nonbanking firms are not subject to the Federal supervision that is placed on traditional bank holding companies. This situation has been compounded by certain States which have attempted to take advantage of other loopholes in the Federal laws and thereby permit evasion of Federal policies on a nationwide scale.

On the other hand, there is a clear need to modify restrictions which are no longer necessary and thus permit additional competition in the provision of needed financial services. In addition, current Federal Reserve Board procedures are unduly burdensome and time consuming. Permitting the Board to act in a more expeditious manner, with due regard for the safety and soundness of our banking system, would benefit not only financial institutions but also the consumers of these financial services.

The need for these improvements in our banking laws has been well documented. The House Banking Committee, under the very able leadership of our Chairman, Fernand J. St Germain, held extensive hearings last year entitled, "How the Financial System Can Best Be Shaped to Meet the Needs of the American People," which explored many of the issues contained in my bill. These same issues were addressed in the Financial Services Competitive Equity Act (S. 2851) which passed the other body last September by the overwhelming vote of 89 to 5, after several years of hearings by the Senate Banking Committee.

Unfortunately, Congress was not able to enact legislation last year. Since Congress adjourned, the situation has deteriorated. The Comptroller of the Currency has had no choice but to charter approximately 100 additional nonbank banks in 15 States and the District of Columbia. Similarly, the Federal Reserve Board was constrained to approve applications for nonbank banks to be acquired by financial institutions located in other States, despite existing provisions in the law which are designed to prevent such acquisitions. Hundreds more applications are awaiting approval by the Federal regulatory agencies, and some State banking agencies have announced their intent to join the parade and charter nonbank banks at the State level. Congress must act, and act soon, to set national policy in this area or these decisions will be effectively delegated to financial institutions and the "loophole" lawyers in their employ.

The legislation I am introducing presents an effective and fair approach to the difficulties facing depository institutions today. It may be described with several general observations. A more detailed section-by-section analysis follows my remarks.

First, certain public policy principles are clearly restated. If a depository institution is federally insured or avails itself of services offered by the Federal Reserve System, then certain national standards must be maintained. However, those State-chartered institutions which do not wish to use Federal services are free to continue without Federal constraints, thus respecting and preserving the dual banking system and the rights of States to create and supervise their own institution.

Second, the Depository Institution Act of 1985 stresses safety and soundness. For example, the bill adds additional authority for the Federal deposit insurance agencies to prohibit or restrict any activity which poses a serious risk of loss to the insurance fund or which is excessively speculative. The Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation [FSLIC] is given increased authority to enforce capital adequacy requirements which are similar to those given to the banking agencies in 1983. Limits are placed on the amount of insured deposits which may be received through a money broker, except for institutions at or below their required net worth, which would be prohibited from accepting any brokered funds.

Third, the problem raised by nonbank banks is confronted in a fair and rational manner. All banking institutions with a Federal connection, either through the use of Federal insurance programs or through the use of Federal Reserve System services, will be regulated under this bill. No institution will be required to divest a bank acquired before today. However, no institution is grandfathered without prudent constraints.

All institutions, and companies controlling these institutions, will be subject to Federal supervision and regulation similar to any other bank or thrift holding company. For example, these institutions would be subject to geographic restrictions, antitrust and antitying provisions, and consumer protections just as any other bank holding company.

Fourth, the problem of State laws which permit institutions to evade Federal policies is also addressed. However, instead of a blunderbuss approach, this bill acts in a narrow manner, only affecting those State provisions which can be shown to be designed to evade a Federal statute or which adversely affect national interests. Thus again, this bill recognizes the rights of the States to legislate for their own institutions and to regulate their activities within their own boundaries, unless such activities directly threaten the safety and soundness of the banking system or derogate Federal law.

Further, measured deregulation should continue so that depository institutions can keep pace not only with technological developments, but also with competition from other financial institutions which offer similar products and services. To do this, my bill adapts language, similar to that proposed by the administration and the Federal Reserve several years ago, to meet new competitive challenges through an affiliated company. Under the Federal Reserve's guidance, I am hopeful that we can have the kind of safe and sound deregulation on the asset side of an institution's books that the Depository Institution Deregulation Committee was able to accomplish on the liability side of the ledger sheet. In addition, my bill provides for gradual geographic deregulation over a five-year period during which the States may limit entry based on asset or deposit size.

Mortgage-backed securities are added to the permissible list of activities under Federal holding company statutes. Procedural reforms are also included to ease administrative burdens.

Finally, continued deregulation implies, in my opinion, a commitment to adequate disclosure to enable the consumer to choose intelligently among the various providers of financial services. My bill requires the Federal financial regulators to ensure that consumers are given full disclosure about their personal finances, particularly regarding interest earnings, fees, and service charges. The bill also provides for the development of a faster check return process so consumers will have better availability and access to their funds.

Although a bill was not forthcoming last year as I had hoped, I did find comfort in the fact that in the waning days of the session, Chairman St Germain and my friend from Utah, Senate Banking Committee Chairman Jake Garn, issued a joint statement which said in part: " . . . we emphasize that legislation addressing the competitive and regulatory framework of the financial system will be the first priority of the Banking Committees of the House and Senate as soon as the 99th Congress convenes in 1985." The two distinguished chairmen then went on to state that they were in full agreement about the "need for a final resolution of all the issues early in the next Congress."

I wholeheartedly applaud the efforts of Chairmen St Germain and Garn to move swiftly on such legislation this Congress. Moreover, I look forward to working closely with them and the rest of my colleagues to enact a comprehensive package early this session.

Thus, it is in a constructive and cooperative spirit that I introduce the Depository Institutions Act of 1985 today. I am sure that Chairman St Germain will soon produce a legislative proposal of his own, as will other colleagues on the committee. It is my genuine hope that all of these proposals will be worthy of hearings by the Banking Committee in the near future. Although Chairman St Germain and I may have different ways to approach the same problem. I am confident that we will work together with help from the rest of our committee colleagues to present a complete legislative package to the House at the earliest possible time.

Mr. Speaker, let me be perfectly frank about this legislation. The Depository Institutions Act of 1985 may not be everything that everyone wants; and it may be more than some people may desire. It does not seek to correct every inequity that exists today on the financial horizon, but it does attempt to offer several practical solutions to many of the difficult problems which confront us.

During this first session of the 99th Congress we should also give serious consideration to the administration's forthcoming proposals for deposit insurance and regulatory reform. Once we have had a sufficint opportunity to review their initiatives, I am sure the Banking Committees in the House and the other body will move with deliberate speed to craft an appropriate legislative response.

In summary, Mr. Speaker, Federal Reserve Board Chairman Paul Volcker correctly has depicted our current dilemma and suggests the reasons why we need to act quickly this year:

"We are at a crucial point. We can turn the system toward creative innovation consistent with certain broad and continuing concerns of public policy. Or, left unattended, we can continue to see the financial system evolve in haphazard and potentially dangerous ways—ways dictated not just by natural responses to market needs but by the often capricious effects of existing and now outmoded provisions of law . . . .

". . . The pervading atmosphere of unfairness, of constant stretching and testing of the limits of law and regulation and of circumvention of their intent, and of regulatory disarray is inherently troublesome and basically unhealthy . . ."

For my money, Chairman Volcker is absolutely correct. We are at a crucial point in the financial history of our Nation. It is time for Congress to recognize this fact and make the hard decisions necessary to bring some rationality to the current financial scene. It is imperative that sound public policy emerge from the legislative process by an act of commission, rather than by an act of omission.

To all of my colleagues, I say in conclusion that I am genuinely determined that we enact comprehensive legislation early in the 99th Congress. You may not like each and every provision, but I hope this bill will contribute to the necessary dialogue. This is but the first step of a long, deliberative process. I intend to visit with Chairman St Germain and all of my collegues on the Banking Committee to begin the necessary consensus building. I look forward to an open process where all competing proposals are considered by the Banking Committee and the House of Representatives. Only after full and unfettered deliberations can we arrive at a meaningul package worthy of our full support.

Once the Banking Committee gets organized, I intend to reintroduce this bill with cosponsors. Based on the comments I receive, I will circulate a revised version for your consideration.

Mr. Speaker, we must move ahead to modernize a financial system which preserves the highest level of public confidence in our Nation's depository institutions. We must have a financial system in place which is a solid foundation for an expanding American economy in the future.

PERSONAL LEGISLATIVE AGENDA FOR 99TH CONGRESS

(Mr. GEKAS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, I plan to join with all of my colleagues, it goes without saying, in the massive attack we are going to make on reduction of the deficit and its concomitant issues during the balance of the 99th Congress.

But in addition, I wish to begin today with the introduction of my personal legislative agenda, and that will include the legislation which I will offer today to place into the Crimes Code of the United States of America a death penalty, a death penalty that has been long missing as part of the remedy for some of the violent homicides that can happen in our country, and to plug a loophole which would, God forbid, in the case of a presidential assassination result in a trial that might not have the death penalty as an appropriate penalty.

In addition to that, I would like many of my colleagues to consider joining me later on during this session in a measure that would, for the first time in a long time, do something about the electoral college in bringing it into the 20th century.

Also, the Speaker's statement in the 98th Congress on January 25, 1984, with respect to recognition for unanimous-consent requests for the consideration of bills and resolutions will apply during the 99th Congress, as will the Speaker's policy for recognition for 1-minute speeches and special orders, alternating between both sides of the aisle, announced on August 8, 1984, and implemented on September 5, 1984.

The Speaker's announced instructions to the Doorkeeper and Sergeant at Arms in the 98th Congress on January 25, 1983, regarding strict enforcement of rule XXXII—specifying those persons having the privileges of the floor during sessions of the House, will be applied during the 99th Congress.

The Speaker's guidelines announced during the 98th Congress on March 3, 1983, regarding unanimous-consent requests for committees to sit during the 5-minute rule will continue to apply during the 99th Congress.

TRIBUTE TO CHARLES A. MOSHER

(Mr. PEASE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks and include extraneous matter.)

Mr. PEASE. Mr. Speaker, it is my sad duty to inform this House of the death last November 16 of former Congressman Charles A. Mosher.

Many of you never had the privilege of meeting Chuck Mosher, but I count myself among the very lucky. He had a profound impact upon my life throughout the 27 years that I knew him. Often he was an inspiration to me—a model of what a public servant should be. Occasionally, he was a gentle, thoughtful critic—someone who knew the importance of asking tough questions and rejecting easy, pat answers. Always he was a special friend of warmth and understanding.

I insert in the RECORD at this point selected material about the distinguished career of my predecessor, Charles A. Mosher, and commend it to the careful reading of every Member of the 99th Congress.

Charles Adams Mosher, Republican, of Oberlin, Ohio; born at Sandwich, Ill., May 7, 1906; graduated from Oberlin College, A.B., cum laude, 1928; married Harriet Johnson, 1929; son, Frederic A., and daughter, Jane Mosher Breece; employed on daily newspapers in Aurora, Ill. (1929-38) and Janesville, Wis. (1938-40); president of Oberlin Printing Co., and editor-publisher of Oberlin News-Tribune, 1940-62; member of Oberlin City Council, 1945-50; member of Ohio Senate five terms, 1951-60; member, Oberlin College Board of Trustees, 1964-70, 1973—; chairman of the board American Oceanic Organization, 1973—; vice chairman of the board, Office of Technology Assessment 1973-74; elected to the 87th Congress November 8, 1960; reelected to each succeeding Congress.

SAYING FAREWELL TO CHARLES MOSHER—HIS MEMO TO THE PEOPLE

(By Randy Wynn)

WASHINGTON.—When former Rep. Charles Mosher announced in 1975 that he would not seek re-election to a ninth term the following year, President Ford and House Minority Leader John Rhodes, R-Ariz., urged him to reconsider.

But Mosher insisted he was ready to retire. The statement he issued in the form of a "memo to the people of Ohio's 13th Congressional District" is still remembered on Capitol Hill for its description of the "kaleidoscopic life" of a congressman.

Mosher remained in Washington about four more years as a college instructor, executive staff director of the House Committee on Science and Technology, and as a fellow at the Smithsonian's Woodrow Wilson Center. But he said his age (70 when he left office), his desire to become a "private citizen" (after 16 years in Congress, 10 years in the Ohio Senate and five years as an Oberlin village councilman) and his hope of beginning a new career compelled him to get out of politics.

Here are some excerpts from Mosher's farewell statement, including what he termed Mosher's Law: "It's better to retire too soon than too late."

Being the "congressman" is rigorous servitude, ceaseless enslavement to a peculiar mix of everyone else's needs, demands and whims, plus one's own sense of duty, ambition or vanity. It is that from which Mrs. Mosher and I now declare our personal independence, to seek our freedom. . . .

Age is the first of two decisive reasons for my decision to retire. I am convinced from observing the sad examples of others, it usually is a mistake for anyone in public office to seek reelection after age 70. Some critics will say, with considerable validity, that the wise quitting age should be before that. I determined many years ago definitely to consider retirement at 70.

It really is no favor to the public interest, nor to one's party, and least of all to oneself, to continue stubbornly in office as an oldster—even if physically fit, mentally alert and allegedly "powerful" in seniority; and even though well intentioned or flattering friends and political allies urge "hang in there." Not one of us is really that essential. So, I believe it obligatory that we should quit cheerfully and voluntarily—earlier rather than later—to thus make room for the younger, fully capable and probably more attuned to the times candidates. . . .

If there are special exceptions to the quit-after-70 general rule (dub it Mosher's Law if you will), they should be very rare exceptions, and I am not one of them. . . .

My second decisive reason for retirement—essentially a very personal and selfish reason, as distinguished from the above general principle—is that I am becoming hungry for privacy, for the opportunity to savor life at my own gait and choosing, hopefully to attain a bit of serenity.

Contrary to a stereotyped opinion popularly encouraged, the job of a congressman is not all special advantages (of which there are many), it is in fact weighted heavily with disadvantages. It requires an onerously demanding, hectic, fragmented schedule of seldom less than seven days per week and often many more than 12 working hours per day, constantly harried by call bells, phone bells, committee sessions (frequently shuttling between two or more meetings at the same time), and at every turn there are deserving people insistently crowding to capture your momentary attention—to confer, to report, to assist, to argue, to request, to demand or plead, to compliment, criticize, invite, etc, etc., staff people, bureaucrats, lobbyists, reporters, colleagues, a steady stream of valued constituents, and varied others. All that plus the House debates, caucuses, briefings, working breakfasts, working lunches, receptions, dinners, homework study, and even midnight collect calls from drunks.

Catch a few minutes for concentrated desk work, there faces you a great pile of letters to read and answer, reports and analyses to absorb, a never ceasing flood of papers, periodicals, pamphlets—propaganda or fact. And very importantly "case work" too, the daily dozens of urgent requests and demands from the district—from individuals, groups, businesses and every other conceivable interest—requiring assistance in their myriad of difficult, complex relationships with the federal agencies. Trips back to the district give no respite, those schedules also are intense, stressful; and even the official committee trips (those "junkets" so popularly scorned) should be and usually are genuinely substantive and demanding.

Yes, I asked for this job, and I like the pay. Do not read into the above paragraphs any personal complaints from me. It is an amazingly fascinating experience to work in this beautiful, powerful capital city. I greatly cherish the honor, the privilege of having been elected to represent here one of this nation's most dynamic districts . . . an excitingly vibrant area and people of immense, diverse productivity, varied and churning attitudes and needs, bursting with further potential, richly cosmopolitan.

But there is so little time or opportunity to study, to think and rethink and get above the battle and view it reflectively in the larger perspectives. There seldom is more than 15 minutes at any one time to concentrate on any single subject—then hop, skip, jump on to another, then another and another. And each one of them—each conversation, each meeting, each letter, each report, each vote—deals with a genuinely substantive significant problem or issue, often complicated, tensely controversial, requiring a responsible decision . . .

Thus it is a congressman's inescapable lot . . . to be never alone, never free from incessant buffeting by people, events, problems, decisions; and always the ubiquitous, skeptical newsmen and other critics looking very closely over one's shoulder, intently watching, questioning, assessing every word or move—and that's the way it must be, it should be—that's what it means today to be a "public servant."

It is a gruelling experience, often frustrating, discouraging, sometimes very disillusioning. Any sense of personal satisfaction from individual, creative accomplishment is for most congressmen rare and partial—small, infrequent victories—necessarily shared with many others. Constantly, the needs, the problems, the opportunities all seem so many, so varied, so immense, so complex, so inextricably twined and often contradictory, and our efforts so indecisive, so inadequate.

To put it simply, I sense in me a certain loss of zest for this kaleidoscopic life; the glamour of it palls, the guff intensifies. Do I have any right or obligation to seek another two years of this tremendous responsibility and opportunity, if I am losing zest for it? I think not.

REMARKS FOR THE MEMORIAL SERVICE OF CHARLES A. MOSHER HELD ON NOVEMBER 24, 1984 BY DON L. PEASE

Let me talk with you today about Chuck Mosher as a Member of Congress, for it was in that capacity that, as the News-Tribune editorialized this week, he added greatly to Oberlin's reputation as "the little town of world renown."

One of Chuck's early campaign slogans was "Mosher—a big man for a big job." Later, his campaign newspaper ads proclaimed of Chuck, "There are 435 members of the House of Representatives—this man is one of the best."

Both claims were correct. Chuck was a big man—physically, ethically and intellectually. And he certainly was one of the best members of Congress.

Chuck made his lasting mark on Congress with a powerful and lively intellect, with a well-developed sense of right and wrong, and with the courage of his convictions.

Science was his special love in Congress. He became a genuine expert on science legislation. He became the ranking Republican member of the House Committee on Science and Technology. He was vice chairman of the congressional Office of Technology Assessment. He was an integral part of America's historic space exploration program of the 1960's and 1970's.

Along the way, he earned the respect and admiration of this nation's leading scientists, engineers and academicians. That is a rare achievement for a politician.

Chuck was proud that he was one of the very first members of Congress to vote against appropriations for the conduct of the Vietnam war. Early on, he took his stand, a stand much criticized both in Washington and here in the 13th District.

I have no doubt that Chuck's courageous stand was a turning point in congressional attitudes toward the Vietnam war. If caused others to re-examine their positions and to muster their own courage.

Many other examples of mind-stretching could be cited, for that was Chuck's way. He formed friendship easily, and he nurtured and cultivated them. But to be a friend of Chuck was to subject yourself to his intellect and his sense of rightness.

He would want to know about your thoughts and activities, and his probing questions revealed a deep intellectual curiosity.

Then would come the questions:

"Say, have you though about . . ."

Or it might not have been a question at all. Perhaps a pregnant pause to raise a slight little doubt in your mind about the wisdom of your position.

Or perhaps a reassuring statement, "Well, I guess maybe you're right," which somehow wasn't very reassuring, which invited re-examination of your views.

Chuck did that with his friends in Congress—and elsewhere, I might add. But his contribution was especially valuable in Congress, where decisions are made which affect the lives of millions of Americans and of people across the world.

As a fellow congressman put it in 1976, "We need men of his caliber—men who never flinch from telling the truth, who dare to challenge colleagues and constituents into deeper though, who truly lead . . ."

Finally, beyond his expertise in science and his role as intellectual catalyst, Chuck made Congress a better institution by the example he set as a person. Many of his colleagues—perhaps without acknowledging it to him or even to themselves—found worthy of emulation his basic decency, his even-handedness, his dedication to reason and principle, his compassion, his accurate sense of perspective, good grace, humility . . . his pun-filled sense of humor.

Such was the case with me. Chuck was for me a teacher, a mentor, a sounding board, a constructive critic, a voice of reason and conscience, an example to follow, a friend.

For 27 years, Jeanne and I have been privileged to be an adjunct part of the Mosher family, to have a special closeness with Chuck and with Harriet—who in her own right surely deserves a congressional medal of distinction. Jeanne and I will be forever grateful for the privilege, and we will miss our friend Chuck Mosher very, very much.

SOMBER REFLECTIONS ON CONGRESS BY A RETIRING MEMBER

(By Luther J. Canter)

Representative Charles A. Mosher (R-Ohio), who has played a significant role with respect to national science policy and environmental energy legislation, announced on 13 December that he will retire from Congress at the end of 1976. Mosher, who will be 70 years old next May, is a liberal Republican and former "country editor" who has represented the largely Democratic 13th Ohio District (bordering Lake Erie, to the west of Cleveland) since 1960. He told reporters that he was finally losing "zest" for the job of a congressman, which he described as one of high honor and good pay ($44,600 a year) but also of "enslavement" to an "onerously demanding, hectic, fragmented schedule" that is almost without relief.

In an interview with this reporter, Mosher, albeit still professing the optimism of one who has long been committed to congressional reform, offered some not very cheerful observations as to why Congress is often mired in indecision and confusion, a state of affairs that has been especially evident this year in the case of energy legislation. As he sees it, the situation is ironic and paradoxical. During his 15 years as a congressman, the House membership has become younger, abler, and more accountable and staff resources have been greatly improved—yet, if anything, the conflict and confusion over major issues seems to deepen. "It seems that the more information we have, the more divided we are," Mosher said. He attributed this to the existence of a "myriad of little [committee] fiefdoms," an absence of party discipline, a lack of leadership on the part of the Speaker and the Senate Majority Leader and—more fundamentally—to a "profound, historic strain of Know Nothingism," or of distrust of expertise, both in the populace and in the Congress itself.

Mosher's own record should qualify him in the eyes of many as something of prophet. He was an early supporter of measures to advance civil rights and protect civil liberties (last year he received an award from the Ohio chapter of the American Civil Liberties Union). He took a public stand against the U.S. involvement in Vietnam as early as 1967, and was the first Republican in either the House or Senate to vote against military appropriations for the Vietnam war. He took a skeptical, uncommitted stance as to Richard Nixon and Watergate long before most of his fellow Republicans.

His support for legislative and governmental reform goes as far back as the 1950's when, as a member of the Ohio State Senate, he successfully sponsored "government in the sunshine" bills. In addition, as a high-ranking member of the Science and Technology and Merchant Marine and Fisheries committees, Mosher has been a sponsor and key Republican supporter of a variety of substantive measures, such as those leading to the establishment of the Office of Technology Assessment (OTA), the Energy Research and Development Administration, and the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, and measures establishing the program of coastal zone management and the programs for the protection of marine mammals and endangered species. The establishment of a new science policy advisory mechanism at the White House has been a particular concern of Mosher's ever since Nixon threw out the old apparatus in early 1973, and he was a floor manager of the bill which the House recently passed to bring this about. A belief in the efficacy of education has been an article of faith with Mosher, and he has constantly supported the National Science Foundation's science teaching activities. His high standing among his colleagues is pointed up by the fact that this year Mosher has chaired the weekly caucus of moderate-to-liberal Republican congressmen, the "Wednesday Group."

Mosher, who feels fine and doesn't look his age, is fully aware of all the advantages of seniority, and he naturally was tempted to run again next year, especially inasmuch as he is regarded as unbeatable. But he concluded that, at 70, it was time to yield to someone younger and more zestful and to adopt a slower, more measured pace and attain "a bit of serenity." He wants to take on a new career part-time, although what it will be he does not yet know.

Mosher believes that, in 1974, the House missed a chance to make itself a better ordered, more effective body when it rejected the so-called "Bolling Plan" for reforming the committee structure. After deliberating for more than a year, a bipartisan select committee chaired by Representative Richard Bolling (D-Mo.) had recommended a wholesale jurisdictional realignment to limit each member to service on only one major committee and largely to eliminate the problem of two or more committees vying for jurisdiction over a particular field of legislative activity. For instance, a new Energy and Environment Committee would have assumed the jurisdictional purview of five other committees, some of which would have either been abolished or reduced to minor status.

But, being perceived as a threat by many of the existing committee and subcommittee charmen and by various lobbying groups which felt comfortable with the status quo, the Bolling Plan was fiercely resisted. Aside from a few procedural reforms (such as forbidding chairmen to vote the proxies of absent members), one of the few significant changes to result from the plan was the consolidation of jurisdictions involved in creating the new Science and Technology Committee. Otherwise, the competition and elbowing among the committees as to continue—indeed, to cite one aggravated case, early this year House leadership had to set up a special temporary select committee to handle bills pertaining to outer continental shelf oil development, about which a half dozen committees were all asserting an interest. Mosher remains convinced that "the only way to cure the congressional indecisiveness is somehow to concentrate authority."

The Know Nothingism about which Mosher complains is, as he knows, a problem that only education can cure, if it can be cured at all. "Congress reflects the public's demand for simple answers," he observes. "But these aren't the kind of answers you get from scientific inquiry."

FINANCIAL ISSUES IN THE 99TH

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. ST GERMAIN] is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. ST GERMAIN. Mr. Speaker, the 99th Congress, which convenes today, is almost certain to make major decisions which will shape the structure, function, and relationship of this Nation's financial system for decades. These decisions will have major domestic and international ramifications.

What we do—or fail to do—will decide whether we have a system which promotes economic progress and equity among all economic classes in the delivery of services or whether we have a system constructed on the quicksand of unfairness and anticompetitive factors certain to cause major disruptions in the American economy.

Mr. Speaker, I sincerely hope that our colleagues, as well as the financial industry, the press and, most of all, the public—the users of financial services—understand the seriousness of the issues. Once the 99th Congress acts, I do not anticipate that we will be returning to this subject area in the near future. The answers we provide must be solid enough to last. Political and economic realities do not suggest the viability of annual tinkering.

So, I sincerely hope that we will have the support of everyone in making certain that we do explore the issues, and that we do not play some kind of legislative "Russian Roulette" in shaping a financial structure that will meet the tests of the future.

Too often, the debate about restructuring the financial industry and granting new powers has been wrapped in the tired old cliches. Essentially, the industry—all segments—has insisted that the Congress approach the issues as a balancing act between competing forces within the financial community. Once the teeter board is balanced—ever how precariously—the rest of the world is supposed to accept the result—so the theory goes. Everything simply trickles down to the economy, to the users of bank services once the industry decides how it wants to structure itself.

Mr. Speaker, I do not think the 99th Congress should accept this approach in considering financial legislation. We must make a good faith effort to examine the needs of the economy and then try to match a restructuring and a set of new powers that meet those needs. We should not try—after the fact—to twist and cram the needs of the economy and the American public into the narrow confines of the financial industry's view of the economic future.

On October 4—near the close of the 98th Congress—I signed a statement with Chairman JAKE GARN of the Senate Banking Committee and Senator WILLIAM PROXMIRE, the committee's ranking minority member, assuring that legislation covering the competitive and regulatory structure of the financial system would have first priority in the new Congress.

We intend to make certain that the commitment is kept.

As that October 4 statement clearly indicated, there is a strong bipartisan concern in both the House and Senate about non-bank banks and the army of loophole chasers that are out to circumvent the intent of the law.

While there is a wide divergence of opinion about what the future of the financial community should be, I sense an overwhelming concern about these non-bank banks and a desire to end this back door silliness forthwith.

The problem—and the need for immediate restatement of congressional policy—is heightened by the attitudes and actions of a Comptroller of the Currency much more attuned to the wishes of the industry than to the intent of Congress and wishes of the public. Neither the public nor the Congress can expect any help from that quarter in lessening the non-bank bank rush.

The non-bank bank situation hangs like a heavy cloud over any discussion of financial legislation. Rational examinations of the issues are difficult so long as the promoters of these back-alley half-a-bank schemes are allowed to operate outside the intent of the law while the rest of the industry is asked to await congressional action on the broader issues.

Mr. Speaker, I think the Congress should—without delay—move to end the non-bank bank operations—with a rollback to the promised July 1, 1983 date. Let's get that out of the way now, and then move immediately to the difficult long-range issues with the clear intent of reaching resolutions as soon as possible.

This is the season in which speculation runs rampant. Everyone in the press and the lobbying organizations are out madly creating and chasing rumors. Everyone wants an immediate projection; a clear picture of what the final legislation will look like after it has gone through the full process. The crystal ball concession is running full tilt.

It would be wounderful if committees were equipped with some of those H.G. Wells time machines that could reach into the future. But, House administration has not yet put those on the approved equipment list, so I would urge everyone to go slow in putting the family fortunes on bets about the shape of the final legislative package—the educated guesses that emerge from those three-martini lunches notwithstanding.

There are, however, some very basic tests that must be applied to any legislation that may emerge in this area in the 99th Congress. The issues are too important, and too far reaching to lend themselves to short-handed versions of the legislative process.

First, every major provisions must have been heard out full in committee. When these issues reach the floor, I want our committee to be able to report to the House that the issues have been aired, that the competing forces have had a chance to present their case, and that we understand the impact of the provisions.

Second, the committee must make a measurement of the public benefits of the proposed structural changes. Change for the sake of change or change for the sake of meeting the wish list of the industry are not enough. We must identify where the public benefits.

Third, not only should the committee examine and identify the positive benefits, but it also must look carefully to make certain that we do not create—by accident or design—anticompetitive situations that work to the detriment of various segments of the economy. We must recognize that banking powers are immense and can be highly volatile if improperly mixed.

Fourth, we must make certain that changes promote the safety and soundness of the financial system and protect the Government's huge contingent liability in this area. At a time when every Government program is being squeezed and every effort is being made to reduce the deficit, we cannot be a party to increasing the potential liability of the Federal treasury. The bedrock of the financial industry is the public's confidence and we must examine carefully whether our actions increase, or diminish, that essential factor.

In approaching the issues involved in new powers, I hope sincerely that the Members, the public, and the press will keep in mind the nature of the financial industry. This industry is not your corner drugstore. It is not the textbook example of competitve free enterprise, as the bankers' historians would have us believe.

Rather, it is a highly protected industry, enjoying an immense array of direct and indirect Government subsidies and inordinately powerful functions that gives it a leg up on other segments of the economy. In many respects, the industry has the characteristics of a utility dispensing essential services in a protected environment.

In the last Congress we heard the word "deregulation" ad nauseum. Few words in the English language have been more abused, mishmashed, and mangled than "deregulation." By the end of the last session, its meaning was lost. It now appears to be little more than a synonym for "industry wish list." So, I hope that people who appear before the committee this year will be explicit rather than simply bowing before the Holy Grail of "deregulation." Let's say what we mean.

Even the industry, itself, has tongue in cheek when it talks about "deregulation." No one in the industry, to my knowledge, has come in the front door demanding a removal of the subsidies and protections provided by Federal and State governments.

If the industry really wanted a fresh, cleanly scrubbed free enterprise, deregulated appearance, it would have to ask discontinuance of the massive full faith and credit insurance program, fail-safe regulatory procedures, various forms of government bailouts, subsidized government loans, tax benefits, billions of dollars of Federal guarantees of bank portfolios, and the warm cocoon of a Federal and State regulatory system that promotes more than it regulates.

So let's face facts. Whatever the industry is talking about when it shouts "deregulate now," it doesn't mean wiping out its larder of Government benefits. Not by a long shot.

Ironically, as the industry has talked about more for itself, it has provided less and less for the public. Access to banking services have been curtailed for some; fees for basic services have skyrocketed; the use of one's own funds has been delayed inordinately by many institutions; bank doubletalk has added to confusion about saving money; responsibility for neighborhood and community revitalization efforts appears to have slipped lower on the list of priorities for some institutions; and more institutions seek to limit their consumer or retail functons.

Mr. Speaker, the financial community, I hope, realizes that it places itself in an untenable position when it comes in, seeks more for itself, and then gives the back of its hand to the public. The public and the Congress would be foolish, indeed, if it did not, up front, demand some quid pro quos for the American consumer, small businesses and others often left on the sidelines when the big decisions are made about financial services.

It is my intention to see that this not be a one-dimensional show and that consumers, small businesses, neighborhoods, and communities get a hearing along with the giants of the financial world. The industry shouldn't be allowed to walk away with all the marbles; the public should have its share.

If we are serious that we are considering a financial system to better serve the public, I suggest it be important that the public be asked in. Somehow, it might just be that the public is a pretty good expert on what the public needs.

Expedited access to deposits, efforts to reduce unfair fees, access to services, disclosure of home mortgage and other lending patterns, disclosure of key elements of savings instruments and other bank services in understandable terms, and upgraded enforcement of consumer laws affecting financial institutions are just a few of the items that the committee needs to examine in connection with any package of legislation.

Many of these consumer protections have evoked outright opposition from elements of the financial community; others have been given only lukewarm and grudging recognition of the need; and others have tried to ignore the issues.

The financial industry has the ability to shoot itself in the foot. If in the process of assuring more for itself, it attempts to provide less for the public, this whole package may end up in the ash heap—shot dead by the industry itself. I sincerely hope that the statesmen and the wise heads in the industry think long and hard about the financial community's attitude toward basic public needs, desires and protection.

If we can gain recognition of the rights of the consumers of bank services, I think there can be a rational and sincere effort to resolve the key issues that many in the financial industry have argued are essential to their future.

It is not my intention to use this forum to laundry list the full range of questions, but certainly they would include:

First, consideration of revisions in the Bank Holding Company and Savings and Loan Holding Company Acts and examination of activities that might serve the public interest under those acts.

Second, consideration of possible changes in the Glass-Steagall Act.

Third, examination of the respective roles of Federal and State regulatory systems for depository institutions carrying Federal insurance and enjoying other Federal subsidies.

Fourth, examination of the Federal insurance programs for depository institutions including issues that involve: (a) the premium system; (b) use of the funds as regulatory tools; (c) the size of insurance coverage; (d) public policy issues involved in extending Federal insurance to institutions that do not provide general banking services in their communities or sharply limit deposit or loan functions; (e) the use of the funds as a bailout mechanism.

Fifth, examination of the structure and the efficacy of the Federal regulatory system for all depository institutions.

Sixth, examination of means to increase discipline within the financial industry including a look at how greater disclosure of conditions and utilization of Federal subsidies and other benefits might bear on the issue.

Seventh, examination of the role of the Federal Government in extending moneys, credit and other assistance to ailing institutions and what checks and balances and disclosures might be needed to assure safe and equitable extension of such benefits.

Eighth, examination of geographical limitations on depository institutions and how such limitations impact on the public interest.

Ninth, examination of existing and potential concentrations of banking resources and power and how such concentrations might impact on the economy and the competitive impact on financial and nonfinancial segments of the economy.

Tenth, examination of the role of brokered deposits.

These are some of the myriad of areas that cry out for consideration in the 99th Congress. Hanging over many, if not all these issues, is the current condition of the financial industry and the much publicized failures of Penn Square Bank in Oklahoma City and the mammoth Continental Illinois National Bank in Chicago.

We are still unraveling the mysteries of those collapses and trying to determine just what these autopsies tell us about the functioning of the banking industry and its regulators.

At the end of 1984, some 79 banks had failed across the Nation—the highest number recorded in a single year since the depression. Another 800 were on the regulators' problem lists.

Clearly it would be irresponsible for the Congress to consider any of the financial issues without keeping in mind these conditions and the general safety and soundness of the entire industry. The lobbying organizations will do their very best to obscure the safety and soundness questions or to defer them until they ride off into the sunset with their new package of goodies.

The Congress has a public responsibility in this area and it must take it seriously. These issues must be considered before, not after the fact. Mr. Speaker, the single overriding emergency in the banking industry at the moment is the proliferation of the so-called nonbank banks and the attempt to change national banking policy through loopholes. At this hour, nearly 400 applications for these half-banks are pending before the Comptroller of the Currency and the Federal Reserve. The actual operation of these banks—outside the scope of the Bank Holding Company Act—would change the face of the financial industry without statutory approval and without public safeguards.

The actions taken at various levels in both the House and Senate in the last Congress and the public statements that have come forth from many Members indicate that there is a broad consensus to close this loophole.

To this end, Mr. Speaker, I have today introduced a new bill designed to end nonbank banks, effective July 1, 1983. I am convinced that we can have this on the President's desk in a matter of weeks if we have cooperation in both bodies. Its enactment is clearly in the public interest and it corrects an obvious defect in the law. Its enactment would signal that the 99th Congress means business about structuring a rational banking system.

While this limited and emergency measure is moving through the legislative process, it would be my intention to begin immediately to structure hearings on the broader and long-range issues.

Mr. Speaker, I am convinced there is wide acceptance that the 99th Congress must deal forthrightly with all the banking issues before us. Most of us—in both Houses and both parties—recognize this. I hope we can move forward without delay in immediately closing the nonbank loophole on an emergency basis. We can then consider the long-range issues—as I have outlined—in a calmer atmosphere.

Mr. Speaker, I am placing in the RECORD a summary of the Bank Definition Act of 1985 which I have introduced today as an effort to close the nonbank bank loophole:

SUMMARY OF THE BANK DEFINITION ACT OF 1985

The bill would amend the definition of "bank" under the Bank Holding Company Act to include a FDIC-insured bank and a Federal or State chartered institution that accepts transaction accounts and makes commercial loans. Exempted from the definition are foreign banks with U.S. branches, thrift institutions and credit unions, Edge Act and similar entities, and limited purpose trust companies.

Institutions that become banks under the change in definition and that were controlled by other entities on July 1, 1983 may continue to be controlled by those entities. Institutions not meeting this grandfather date must be divested within two years from the date of enactment, unless approval to control the institution is granted by the Federal Reserve Board under existing Bank Holding Company Act standards. Affiliations entered into on or after May 24, 1984 must be divested immediately on enactment, rather than in two years.

H.R. 20

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SHORT TITLE

SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the "Bank Definition Act of 1985".

FAMINE RELIEF AND RECOVERY ASSISTANCE FOR SUFFERING PEOPLE OF AFRICA

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. RODINO] is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. RODINO. Mr. Speaker, I am proud to join with my distinguished colleagues in cosponsoring this supplemental appropriations bill to provide famine relief and recovery assistance for the suffering people of Africa.

This legislation is the successor to a similar bill introduced last September in the waning days of the 98th Congress and which we unfortunately did not have enough time to consider. I am concerned that we not delay action any longer. Famine is a cruel sentence of death that will not wait for prolonged congressional debate.

Mr. Speaker, the tragedy in Africa is not a political issue. It is a human issue. Starvation is not a subject for geopolitical considerations. It is a horror that deserves immediate action. There comes a time when the people of the world must lay down their differences and dedicate themselves to ending the nightmare of hunger. This is the time.

The situation in Africa is a crisis of ghastly proportions. The devastation there gnaws at the conscience of humanity almost as corrosively as it wears away at its victims.

Consider the magnitude. Over 150 million Africans are affected by the drought, which is the equivalent of two-thirds of the population of the United States; 5 million children died in 1984, and another 5 million faced permanent physical and mental damage. The chance a child will die before the age of 1 is 10 times greater in Africa than here in the United States. Millions of desperate refugees aimlessly wander the sub-Saharan Desert, in search of mere survival.

Moreover, the infrastructure of roads, trucks, tools, and water systems—which we in America take for granted—has completely deteriorated in Africa.

Mr. Speaker, as Americans we have been blessed with a fertile land and abundant resources. Yet our spirit has always been generous and our motives humanitarian. Our Nation is the breadbasket of the world, the largest producer of surplus food, and the providers of at least half of the international food relief during emergencies.

This legislation falls in the American tradition of emergency aid and recovery assistance. Over three-quarters of $1 billion will be targeted for emergency food relief. This sum should provide for an estimated half of Africa's immediate food needs.

An additional $225 million will promote longer range recovery and food development, including agricultural technology and infrastructure rebuilding. This money will be directed toward creating conditions which will hopefully prevent future crises like the one that confronts us today.

With this legislation, we take a first and necessary step toward relieving Africa of the ravages of famine and building a viable agricultural economy for the future.●

STATUE OF LIBERTY-ELLIS ISLAND COMMEMORATIVE COIN BILL INTRODUCED

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ANNUNZIO] is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, next year marks the centennial of the Statue of Liberty. The statue and Ellis Island are undergoing extensive restoration. The work is being done under the direction of the Statue of Liberty-Ellis Island Foundation, which is doing an outstanding job. However, the foundation needs to raise additional funds to cover the restoration cost of $230 million. To help pay for this project and to commemorate the centennial in 1986 of this most American of symbols, I am introducing legislation to provide for the minting of commemorative coins for sale to the public. The profits from the coin sales would be used to help pay for the restoration.

One of the most remarkable features of American society is its rich ethnic diversity. In my home of Chicago there are hundreds of small communities, each distinguishable from the other in language, religion, and nationality. One can have spaghetti for lunch, Kielbasa for dinner, and finish the evening dancing the horah. Despite the great diversity, there are common values: A love of freedom, a sense of justice, and a passionate regard for liberty.

The Statue of Liberty was donated to the United States by the people of France to symbolize the close bond between our two nations. The statue has become more than that—it is the symbol of liberty itself. The statue holds the promise of a new life: to the oppressed, freedom; to the tired, comfort; to the homeless, shelter. When the immigrants packed their meager belongings and unbounded hopes to journey to these shores, they were welcomed first by Liberty. Her promise was the promise of America. And they found that the promise was kept.

After a journey of thousands of miles these weary but wide-eyed travelers faced one more journey. That journey of little over a mile—the trip from Ellis Island to the mainland—was short in distance but lengthy in anxiety. If Liberty lifted her lamp beside the golden door, as Emma Lazarus wrote, then Ellis Island was the golden door.

Over 100 million Americans today are descendants of the 17 million weary persons who passed by the Statue of Liberty, and on through the golden door of Ellis Island. In 1892, the island was the Nation's first, largest, and most important immigration station.

The largest of the 33 structures is the 200-foot-long brick and limestone registration building. Many older Americans still remember climbing the long stairs to the great hall, and the vast expanses of its vaulted spaces. Doctors peered through hidden windows, singling out the diseased and infirm. Those suspicious of being unhealthy were marked with chalk letters for examination, treatment, and for the unlucky few, a long and sad return journey. To the 2 percent who were sent back home, and to their family members who stayed, Ellis Island was the island of tears. To the vast majority, the island was the portal to the reality the statue symbolized: Liberty.

Today, these monuments to our cherished values and the rich diversity of our people are in dire need of repair. Rust has severely damaged the statue. While the central framework is still sturdy, much of the support for the skin is being replaced. The shoulder of the right arm will be reworked and reinforced. The torch has been taken down and a new one built exactly like the original, will be installed. A new guardrail lining the helical stairs will give visitors a new view of the interior, and a glass encased elevator will rise through the pedestal. A new ventilation and air-conditioning system will be installed. Finally, workers will comb the surface of the skin repairing holes, sealing cracks, and hammering out bends. In the end, the statue will be as good as new.

Ellis Island is in equal need of repair. Once filled with the babble of hundreds of languages, the great hall is now silent and empty, its walls cracked and crumbling. The toll of weather and pollution alone would have been enough to ruin the neglected buildings. But the elements were aided by vandals who tore down the copper eaves and gutters, ripped apart the oaken water closets and looted the interior. All the original furniture, tableware, and fixtures are now gone.

Like the Statue of Liberty, there are impressive plans for the restoration of the old immigration station. There will be a new museum of immigration containing the story of the people who came and made this Nation great. A computer center will be installed where people can trace their roots. Many of the buildings will be restored to their original appearance, and the great hall will appear just as it did nearly 100 years ago.

All of this restoration will cost money, $230 million in all. The sale of three different commemorative coins will raise $137.5 million at no cost to the Government. But more than that, the coins will commemorate the values that the statue and Ellis Island represent. The $5 gold coin will commemorate the centennial of the Statue of Liberty in 1986. The silver dollar coin will be emblematic of the use of Ellis Island as a gateway for immigrants to America. The half dollar will honor the contributions of immigrants to America.

One-half million gold coins will be minted, and a surcharge of $35 per coin will be included in their price to provide funds for the restoration work. Similarly, 10 million silver dollars will carry a $7 per coin surcharge and 35 million half dollars will carry a $2 per coin surcharge. The coins would be sold directly to the public by the U.S. Mint and would also be available through federally insured financial institutions which wished to carry them.

The legislation requires that there be no net cost to the Government from the sale of the coins. In fact, the coin sales will generate up to $172 million in revenue to the Federal Government from the sale of the gold and silver in the coins.

In the end, the Statue of Liberty and the monuments on Ellis Island will stand for generations as testaments to the history of the American immigration story. Children and grandchildren will be able to come and literally walk in the footsteps of their ancestors.

When President Grover Cleveland accepted the Statue of Liberty, he made the following promise: "We will not forget that liberty has here made her home; nor shall her chosen altar be neglected." With this legislation we will keep his promise.●

THE BIENNIAL BUDGETING ACT OF 1985

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA] is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Speaker, in recent years our work on the Federal budget has come to dominate the congressional agenda. We begin the debate on spending cuts, tax changes, the impact of deficits on the economy and the political implications of budget votes within hours of our arrival in the House Chamber for the beginning of the new session, and these issues monopolize our time and energy through the spring, summer, and fall, elbowing aside other issues of national importance.

Also, because we begin the budget debate so quickly we get virtually no chance to do any serious thinking about what our long-term goals for the Federal budget should be and the best path to achieve those goals. We start making basic decisions on taxes and spending before our greatest resources on the budget—House committees—get a chance to hold hearings and debate policy alternatives. The way we operate is akin to taking the field at the Super Bowl without a game plan.

No one can deny the importance of our work on the Federal budget, but I question whether we should let it dominate our legislative deliberations and whether it is good government to make decisions on spending and taxes without laying a proper foundation through committee hearings followed by debate on policy options among Members. In view of the deficit crisis we are now confronting, we owe it to the country to consider a more rational way of developing Federal budgets.

I believe the Congress would better handle the formidable challenge of reducing budget deficits by moving to a 2-year budget cycle, and today with RALPH REGULA I am reintroducing legislation which proposes a biennial budgeting process for Congress.

First introduced in 1977, the Biennial Budgeting Act proposes that the first year of each congressional term be devoted to formal oversight of programs and agencies, to the reporting by the Budget Committees of a budget resolution, and the reporting by the legislative committees of all authorizing legislation. Early in the second year authorization bills and a budget resolution would be passed, making way for consideration of appropriation bills, which would be adopted before the beginning of the 2 fiscal-year period.

This approach would yield three basic benefits: more oversight of present programs, more time for thoughtful planning of a new budget, and more time to consider nonbudgetary matters. It would take us away from the stop and go funding we now engage in, where too many decisions result from last-minute panic instead of proper planning and extended debate.

Specifically, the bill would provide for the following schedule:

FIRST YEAR

The committees of each House would spend the first 6 months of the first session conducting oversight hearings on existing programs and policies. Following these hearings, the authorizing committees would have another 6 months to report out new legislation. The Budget Committees would report out a concurrent budget resolution by November 30, which would allow legislative committees time to incorporate guidelines within the resolution into their work.

SECOND YEAR

Each House would devote itself to working on new authorizing legislation, with a deadline of March 10 for passage of these measures. March 31 is set as the deadline for passage of a budget resolution covering the next 2 fiscal years, after which appropriation bills would be considered. By April 15, the Appropriations Committees are to report out their bills. Under the act action on appropriation bills is to be completed by the seventh day after Labor Day.

In recent years support for a 2-year budget has increased considerably. In the Senate this past session 2-year bills were introduced by Senators ROTH and COCHRAN, and Senators FORD and QUAYLE introduced a biennial budgeting bill jointly.

Alice Rivlin, former Director of the Congressional Budget Office, and Comptroller General Charles Bowsher have praised the 2-year concept. In Ms. Rivlin's testimony before the Rules Committee's Task Force on the Budget Process she stated that a biennial budget would reduce the legislative burden, encourage oversight and enhance the quality of deliberation.

Mr. Bowsher, in his testimony before the same task force, commented that a biennial budget would significantly enhance the stability of the entire budget process. He went on to state that a 2-year budget would allow more time for congressional decisionmaking and oversight, reduce the number of times the Congress must act on the same program; provide more time for long-range planning, and provide an opportunity for better budget analysis, financial and operation planning, budget execution and program review by both the Congress and the executive branch.

The General Accounting Office has examined the experience States have had with 2-year budgets, selecting Ohio, Wisconsin, and Florida—all 2-year budget States—for analysis. The GAO report observed that in the legislatures of these States timing of budget bills and budget workload are not considered a problem. The advantages of 2-year budgeting were summarized this way in the report:

> During the 2-year budget cycle, agency personnel can spend time in the off-budget year managing their agency activities.
> Biennial budgeting does not require the state government's full time attention for budget review every year. Therefore more time is available to do nonbudget activities.
> Biennial budgeting allows a "planned approach" to 2-year budgeting; that is, through budget preparation, analysis of policy issues and major budget proposals.

On another front the Rules Committee Task Force on the Budget Process, under the leadership of Representative TONY BEILENSON, considered the 2-year budget as one of four major budget process reform options. Nine Members from the House and Senate testified in favor of a biennial approach at task force hearings, and in the task force report a first step toward 2-year budgeting was recommended—multiyear authorizations. The Committee on Rules report on the bill that evolved from the work of the Beilenson task force, H.R. 5247 (Rept. 98-1152), also recognized the need for taking this first step, stating that:

> Extending the duration of authorizations (making them multi-year) would certainly reduce the time spent on authorization legislation in hearings, markup, floor debate and conference and would increase the likelihood that authorizations will be in place before the House should begin consideration of appropriation bills. There is no doubt that requiring all annual authorizations to be extended to multiyear authorizations would help resolve some timetable difficulties.

The committee report also encouraged studies of the feasibility of placing some annually financed programs on a two-year appropriation cycle.

While the Rules Committee bill did not reach the floor last year, I hope the House will have a chance to debate a reintroduced version of H.R. 5247 during its 99th session. Two-year authorizations and experimentation with 2-year appropriations will prepare us for a comprehensive 2-year budget schedule, and I look forward to the House discussing these first steps toward biennial budgeting when we debate budget process reform legislation from the Rules Committee.

Other interest in the idea of 2-year budgeting has come from the National Academy of Public Administration, which stated in a report entitled "Revitalizing Federal Management" (November 1983) that:

Many options are being considered which would reduce the congressional workload and the attendant Executive Branch overburden, but only one really stands out as likely to have a real and lasting impact—the idea of a biennial budget.

It is beyond the scope of this report to judge whether a biennial budget is politically acceptable and feasible for the Congress. However, it is certainly technically feasible within the Executive Branch, and the NAPA Panel strongly recommends that both the Executive Office of the President and the Congress work in close coordination to consider its adoption.

Other groups outside Congress, namely the Committee for Economic Development and the Heritage Foundation, have commented favorably on the idea of 2-year budgeting. The CED, a group of business and education leaders based in New York, announced their support for active experimentation with 2-year, or longer, appropriations for certain programs in a report released in June of 1983. The group went on to comment that if a high percentage—of appropriation bills—prove suitable for a 2-year decision cycle, the committee recommends an eventual move to a biennial budget. Finally, a Heritage Foundation report entitled "The Advantages of Two-Year Budgeting for the Pentagon" concluded that 2-year budgeting could enhance U.S. national security. The report, released on November 5, 1984, stated that:

A two-year defense budget would allow Congress time for more effective oversight. It would lower real unit costs by bringing more certainty into the procurement process. It would allow more time for reflection on major issues. If two-year appropriations were coupled with even longer-range binding budget resolutions, more stability, effectiveness, and savings might be brought into the defense marketplace.

I am pleased that the idea of a 2-year budget is attracting more attention, and I hope Congress will take a hard look at the advantages of a biennial timetable during this session. Yes, it will be difficult to put aside the grave problems we now face with regard to ever-growing budget deficits and focus on options to make the budget process more effective, but if we do not search for ways to improve the process we will simply repeat the budget chaos that has characterized recent years.

Again, under the current process there is simply too little time to investigate which Federal programs are working and which are not, and what tax policy makes sense, and to little thought is given to long range strategies for dealing with budget problems. We need to revamp our current timetable and engage in an extensive, thoughtful debate about what the responsibilities of Government should be, what programs are needed to carry out those responsibilities, and how we are going to pay for those programs.

The yearly scramble we engage in here in the House of Representatives for a deficit reduction plan that can pass has eclipsed virtually all efforts at formulating a rational budget path for the coming decade. With $200 billion deficits staring us in the face we do not, frankly, have the luxury of continuing our ad hoc approach to the budget. It is essential that we conduct oversight of Federal programs and try to devise a budget path that will eliminate deficits and keep essential Government programs effective. Without a 2-year budget process the chances of fulfilling these responsibilities are, in my opinion, slim.

I hope Members will take a close look at my 2-year budget bill and I look forward to discussing the concept with my colleagues in the coming months.

The following is a copy of the Biennial Budgeting Act of 1985:

H.R. 382

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SHORT TITLE

SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the "Biennial Budgeting Act of 1985".

FINDINGS AND PURPOSE

SEC. 2. (a) The Congress hereby finds and declares that the present annual budgeting process of the Congress—

(1) allows too little time for the fulfillment by the Congress of its legislative oversight responsibilities;

(2) allows too little time for the review and consideration by the Congress of authorizing legislation, of budget resolutions, and of appropriation bills; and

(3) allows too little time for the evaluation of costly and complicated Federal programs and consequently contributes to the unrestrained growth of the Federal budget.

(b) It is the purpose and intent of the Congress in this Act to establish a more thorough and timely process for the enactment of the Federal budget by—

(1) establishing a two-year cycle for the adoption of the budget;

(2) providing clearly allocated time for the holding of oversight hearings by the several committees of each House in order to review the various programs and agencies of the Federal Government; and

(3) requiring that consideration of authorizing legislation, of the budget, and of appropriation bills and resolutions be separate and distinct, thus allowing full evaluation of the need for and the merits and costs of the various programs and agencies of the Federal Government.

AGREEMENTS ON STEEL IMPORTS DO NOT GO TO THE INDUSTRY'S BASIC PROBLEMS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GAYDOS] is recognized for 30 minutes.

● Mr. GAYDOS. Mr. Speaker, just a few weeks ago, the U.S. Trade Representative announced the signing of voluntary export restraint agreements with seven major steel exporting nations, an achievement that must be applauded.

I want to commend Bill Brock, the USTR, and his staff, for their diligent efforts to reach these agreements that will reduce steel imports to this Nation over the next 5 years.

However, at the risk of sounding like an obstructionist, I must express my concern at what has truly been gained by these agreements. I am afraid that we have done little except to counteract the surge in steel imports we have experienced during the past 2 years.

And, if that is the case—and nothing I have seen yet indicates an adjustment to bring about deeper reductions—then these agreements are little more than window dressing and certainly not the major effort to address the problems of the suffering American steel industry in today's marketplace.

If all we have achieved by these agreements is to return to the levels of import penetration of 1982 and later, then we certainly haven't given our steel industry the opportunity it needs to retool, modernize and increase its efficiency and marketability, despite Mr. Block's words that "these agreements offer our steel industry a reasonable opportunity to compete without being battered by foreign unfair trade practices and surges."

What the USTR has achieved, primarily, is the administration's goal of reducing steel imports to between 18 and 20 percent of U.S. consumption of finished steel products, a far cry from the 15-percent quota limits the congressional steel caucus sought, with the blessing and strong support of the steel industry itself.

What we have gotten instead is a major reduction in the steel import surge experienced particularly in the third quarter of 1984. In effect, the seven countries which signed agreements will limit their steel exports for the next 5 years to about 10.1 percent of U.S. domestic steel consumption, about a 36-percent drop from the 15.7-percent share of the U.S. market these countries had in 1984's third quarter.

Looking back, though, the agreements will return steel import levels to about those experienced in 1982 when the seven countries in question—Australia, Brazil, Japan, Mexico, Spain, South Africa, and South Korea—had a 10.7-percent share of the American steel market.

All of the efforts by the congressional steel caucus were aimed at returning to the average U.S. steel consumption during the 1979–81 period, about 8.5 percent for the seven countries with whom new agreements were signed.

If we look closely at the agreed to market shares of American steel consumption, we find that only Japan and Spain will be exporting somewhat less steel to the United States than they did in 1981, the year before steel imports truly surged.

But it appears that this administration isn't looking back beyond the real surge in imports—the one that occurred in the third quarter of 1984.

In comparison with that quarter, Australia will have the least reduction, dropping from 0.2 percent of the American market to 0.18 percent, and Spain will have the largest cut in market share, from 2.2 percent to 0.67 percent.

For the other countries, the reductions will vary in comparison to the third quarter of 1984. Brazil's share will drop from 1.3 percent to 0.8 percent; Japan's will be reduced from 7.6 percent to 5.8 percent; Mexico will fall from 0.7 percent to 0.3 percent; South Africa will export 0.42 percent as compared to 0.9 percent; and South Korea will drop from 2.8 percent to 1.9 percent.

A look at the attached table, however, shows that the cuts in imports are not cuts in market shares beyond the surge in steel imports in the past 2 years.

I think the comment by Robert F. Anderson, chairman of Hanna Mining Co., at the American Iron Ore Association annual meeting in November truly sums up my own feelings about this administration's attitude toward the domestic steel industry.

At that meeting, Anderson said:

When the steel and iron ore industries seek enforcement of domestic trade laws, they are accused of being "protectionists." Yet, let a rumor spread about a failure of a major money-center bank and the Government is on the scene within hours offering billions in financial guarantees.

Why, I ask, has the Government not offered similar help to the U.S. steelmakers who lost $6.8 billion in 2 years?

Mr. Anderson, the same thought has crossed my mind as well. Steel imports continue to take their toll on American business, forcing reductions in operations, layoffs, both temporary and permanent, and increasing our inability to compete, yet our attempts to seek long-term answers are rebuffed while we settle for short-range responses that don't get to the root of the problems.

A tough question that must be asked is: Would steel exports to the United States have dropped anyway in the coming year because of an expected drop in demand?

If imports to the United States would have fallen anyway, then the VER's will have little impact on the long-term concerns of the steel industry because the imports will have the same or a larger share of the domestic steel market.

And, actually, we will be in worse shape than we are today. Even assuming there is no change in the demand for steel, it is unlikely that any great benefits for the steel industry will be achieved.

A steel analyst at Paine Webber Group anticipates that any impact from the administration's efforts will not be felt until the middle of this year. At that time, he says, we could be headed into a recession and this would create another cycle of excess capacity and sinking prices for the steel industry.

Certainly, all of us with concern for the steel industry and the American men and women employed by it hope the administration program works and offers the industry the opportunity it needs to restore its competitiveness, but we will just have to wait and see if the program works.

I have my doubts.

HOUSING: A GROWING CRISIS DEMANDS ACTION

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GONZALEZ] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr Speaker, this Nation is in the midst of a great and growing housing crisis. As much as anything else, this crisis demands that we choose between decency and degradation. We must either enact a reasonable, realistic housing program or see the number of homeless people increase, watch the quality of housing decline, and stand idle and mute as more and more millions pay more for less housing, find themselves unable to afford any decent shelter, or be unable to find any shelter all all. I do not believe that we can continue to follow policies that make a bad situation worse, policies that create degradation and desperation, policies that ignore need and promote greed. We must recognize the growing housing crisis, and recognize that it demands action.

I am offering a bill to reverse the destructive, disastrous and unconscionable housing policies of the last 3 years. My bill will not restore anything like the level of effort that is needed to meet the urgent and expanding housing needs of the country, but it will reverse the direction that has been followed in the past 3 years.

The need for action is great and growing. We not only have more poor people than ever, the percentage of Americans who are poor is growing. At the same time, housing that the poor can afford is disappearing. No one knows how many homeless people there are, but we do know that the nameless and numberless poor are growing in number, that every city and town and hamlet in the country finds its emergency shelter wholly inadequate to meet even minimal needs. As the supply of housing that the poor can afford drops, and the number of poor people grows, and as States and communities continue to cut back social services, more and more people are being pushed first into the slums and then into the streets.

In the past 6 years, the number of Americans living in poverty has increased by one-third, so that today no less than 15 percent of the population, or one in every seven Americans—is poor. The greatest increase in poverty has taken place since 1980. Nor is there any sign that the growth in poverty is abating. The percentage of Americans who own their homes is dropping. Measured in real terms, average gross weekly earnings have declined every year since 1979, with the sole exception of 1983. Since 1983, average weekly earnings have again dropped, but at the same time, rental costs increased by almost 11 percent. Rental costs are in fact going up faster than homeownership costs—reflecting a demand for rental housing that simply is not being met.

In the face of the growing need for housing assistance, the policy of the Federal Government since 1981 has been to cut housing commitments. In fact, the budget for assisted housing programs has been cut by 60 percent since 1981. Housing has been cut by more than any other element of the budget. In fact, virtually the only assisted housing program being built today consists of funds that were authorized before the current administration imposed its cuts. These cuts were made in the face of the President's own housing commission report that in 1981 confessed the fact that at least 7 million low-income households were paying more than 40 percent of their income for rent, but getting no housing assistance of any kind. Undeniably the need has grown in the intervening years, yet while the need was for a greater effort, unprecedented cuts were imposed. It is little wonder that we have seen a steady growth in the number of people who are desperate for housing, and a steady increase in the number who are forced to live in the streets for lack of even the most rudimentary shelter.

The aim of the housing bill I am introducing today is to reverse the administration's determined effort to abandon any kind of housing assistance. No longer do we hear any talk about a "social safety net," nor do we even hear that the administration will propose an expansion of even its own housing voucher experiment. In fact, what we hear is that the fiscal 1986 budget will call for no new housing effort at all. This should not surprise anyone who recalls the 1984 proposal to cut housing by an additional 38 percent, a proposal that Congress rejected. Nor should it surprise anyone who understands that the administration actually thinks that housing is a local problem that local governments can resolve, even though this flies in the face of experience, all evidence, and even common sense. Local governments cannot meet all their housing needs without Federal help today, any more than they could in the Great Depression years. My bill simply recognizes the undeniable fact that assisted housing programs are essential, that the level of Federal effort must in some way be related to the actual need, and that decency demands an effective Federal housing program.

The housing bill I am offering would roughly double the current level of assisted housing production. This would still be a housing program that is 30 percent below the 1980 figure—despite the great growth in need that has taken place since that time. In addition, the bill provides for an emergency shelter program of $200 million, recognizing that greater efforts are unquestionably needed at a time when human beings still elect to freeze on the streets of Washington rather than endure the bedlam and, yes, degradation of existing emergency shelter. If it seems to some more dignified to die in the streets than to go to shelters that would have made Dickens cringe, that alone should give us all sleepless nights and troubled minds. What kind of Nation is it that can spend 50 percent more for a single satellite than this bill calls for to provide emergency shelter—a figure that nevertheless will be called excessive?

My housing bill aims to block administration efforts to impose unnecessary and destructive fee payments on FNMA and GNMA, the Nation's principal providers of secondary mortgage markets. At a time when homeownership is slipping, when housing production continues to be some 750,000 units a year below demonstrable need, it is beyond comprehension that the administration would seek to cripple the two agencies that generate the greatest financial resources available to the housing industry today, the two agencies that more than anything else make homeownership still possible in our country. Moreover, this bill recognizes that the Office of Management and Budget has gone far beyond its legal authority, and has in fact arrogated to itself regulatory functions that law assigns to the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development and to the Secretary of Agriculture, and intends to restore the proper authority of those agencies. It is not acceptable that the administration continues to try to undo by regulation what Congress seeks to do by statute, and this bill corrects a number of administrative abuses that have occurred in the past 2 years.

Overall the bill I am offering would authorize about 284,000 new assisted housing units. It would, for example, triple new public housing units, from the fiscal 1985 level of 5,000 to 16,500. Section 8 moderate rehabilitation, a most efficient and cost-effective program, would rise from 5,000 units to 30,000 new units. A new homeownership program, modeled on the Nehemiah Program that the subcommittee studied in New York last year, would be authorized. This program is a classic, neighbors helping each other, people helping themselves efforts, of the type that exemplifies the American spirit of innovation and neighborliness that the President so often espouses. This effort, if it were funded at a level of $600 million, would enable almost 31,000 people to become homeowners.

Any housing bill is complex, because the needs of the Nation are vast, varied, and constantly growing. I am offering for the record two tables that summarize the bill and compare it to the present level of housing programs. It is a bill that reverses the current direction, because this country cannot afford to continue down a road that casts more and more people into the streets, that forces ever larger numbers of our people to pay exorbitant costs for completely inadequate housing; nor can this country abide a policy that ignores need and reality alike, a policy that by inaction forces growing numbers of people first into anxiety, then into desperation, and finally into degradation. Not one of us has failed to see the need. Every one of us has seen the homeless. Every one of us has seen the number of homeless people grow. Every one of us knows that affordable, decent housing is a precious and shrinking commodity. The question is whether we will accept these facts for what they are, accept our responsibility to respond, and enact a housing policy that is at least decent in spirit. That is what this bill provides—a modest and decent response to a great and growing national housing crisis.

□ 1840

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert at this point in the RECORD an exact tabulation of the fiscal year 1986 housing bill because the subject of housing is complex.

A housing bill by its very nature is complex because the needs of the Nation are vast, varied and constantly growing.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

MILITARY FAMILY BILL OF RIGHTS ACT OF 1985

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, I have also introduced what I call the Military Family Bill of Rights Act of 1985.

Military families are subjected to unique problems and difficulties. They are subjected to frequent relocations, they have no real choice about their assignment, and they have no real control over their family arrangements, because of the pressures and frequent disruptions that flow from the nature of military life. Family separation is a problem; financial burdens created by uncontrollable moves and housing expenses are a problem; inadequate pay and inadequate benefits are a problem. Even though there are many different resources available to military personnel, there is no systematic approach to family problems, the resources are inadequate, and the consequence is real injustice. It is unjust to have military families forced to live in inadequate housing; unjust to deny their families a full range of health benefits; unjust to fail to recognize that family problems must be addressed in a systematic and caring way. Therefore, I am reintroducing a bill I first introduced last October to bring about a greater degree of justice for military families.

My bill provides a supplement to the housing allowances that are available today. In any high-cost area, the basic allowance for quarters is insufficient. Even though there is and has been for some years a supplementary housing allowance, the variable housing allowance, that program has been inadequately funded. My bill does two things: it reduces the out-of-pocket costs required to qualify for the variable allowance from 15 percent of pay to 10 percent. That is only fair, if you consider that military families would live in free housing, if the military had enough housing to serve all its families. In addition, the bill provides that cost recoveries resulting from savings in procurement will be used to finance the Variable Housing Allowance Program. Thus, the airmen who reported the $7,000 coffee pot, the $635 arm rests and the like, would have some incentive to report such abuses, because military members would know that resulting savings would benefit them, as is only just.

My bill also brings dental care under the CHAMPUS Program. Dental care is not always available to military dependents, but it ought to be. Dental care can be exceedingly expensive, as anyone who has had dental surgery knows. Thee is no reason why such care should not be included in CHAMPUS.

I am also seeking the establishment of an Office of Family Services in the Department of Defense. This office would for the first time make family concerns a priority of the Department of Defense. It would establish and implement a system to provide military family financial assistance—a service that is provided today only on a local, ad hoc basis. The office would provide consumer information and assistance; and it would help with job placement and referrals—an important service when military family members must often change jobs as a result of relocations. The office would also serve as a family advocate, so that the Department of Defense could recognize and focus on family concerns among service members.

Family life in the military is not easy. It is subject to unusual stress and pressures by the very nature of the job of the military member. These pressures are very much a concern of troop commanders and base commanders. But these commanders do not have the resources to deal with family problems, as much as they might wish otherwise. Local commanders cannot invent money when housing allowances are not adequate, and they cannot provide information and assistance, except on an ad hoc basis. They can do nothing about the need for placing dental care under CHAMPUS.

My bill addresses these concerns. It speaks to the need for a comprehensive effort to assist military families. The need is great, and is a matter of urgent concern for the 99th Congress.

INTRODUCTION OF BILL TO RAISE THE OMB DIRECTOR TO CABINET STATUS

(Mr. BROOKS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD and to include extraneous matter.)

● Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, today I am offering legislation which would raise the executive level ranking of the Director of the Office of Management and Budget to that of the members of the President's Cabinet. If the first term of the Reagan administration has taught us anything, it is the power and vital position the OMB Director holds in shaping the direction and policy of the executive branch. Yet, in the bureaucratic framework, the OMB Director is one notch below the members of the Cabinet whose budgets and management practices he oversees.

Congress has recognized the importance of the position of OMB Director by requiring that his nomination be subject to confirmation by the Senate. We should take the additional step of compensating the Director at the level of Cabinet Secretaries and his deputy at the level of deputy Cabinet officers.

Mr. Speaker, as I have noted in introducing this bill in previous Congresses, my interest is institutional rather than personal. Whether the individual holding the office of OMB Director is James Lynn in the Ford administration, or James McIntyre in the Carter administration, or David Stockman in the Reagan administration, it is the office of OMB Director and the responsibilities exercised by that office that call for the Director to be compensated at the level of a Cabinet officer. I hope this bill will be approved promptly by the 99th Congress.●

CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT PROVIDING FOR DIRECT ELECTION OF THE PRESIDENT

(Mr. BROOKS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD and to include extraneous matter.)

● Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, the electoral college is an anachronistic and potentially dangerous vestige of another time in our history. It makes the two elected officials who govern over all the people, the President and Vice President, subject to a cumbersome process that in some circumstances could thwart the will of the people. It is time for us to abolish the electoral college and provide for the direct election of the President by the voters. I am introducing a constitutional amendment today which will accomplish this goal.

Direct election is the method by which all of our other elected public officials in this democracy are chosen. It is the only process that is completely consistent with the ideals of democracy that we as a nation believe in and have fought to uphold for nearly 200 years.

The cumbersome and anti-democratic process of the electoral college runs counter to this current of history. While in other areas, such as the extension of the right to vote, we have expanded our democracy, the electoral college remains as a relic of an era that bore an underlying suspicion for the will of the people.

My amendment will provide that a candidate receiving at least 40 percent of the popular vote would be elected. If no candidate got 40 percent, my proposal would provide for a runoff election between the highest two finishers.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that the 99th Congress will seriously consider the dangers posed by the electoral college and give the people a true voice in electing the President by approving my amendment.●

LAW ENFORCEMENT PROTECTION ACT OF 1985

(Mr. BROOKS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD and to include extraneous matter.)

● Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I am today introducing legislation to ban cop-killer, armor-piercing bullets. The Law Enforcement Protection Act of 1985 is identical to legislation I proposed in the last Congress. As my colleagues may recall, that bill enjoyed the broad and bipartisan support of over 200 cosponsors, the administration, and many police and sporting groups. Unfortunately, in the closing rush of the last Congress this important legislation was not acted upon.

It is the aim of my bill to ensure the continued utility of the lifesaving soft body armor vests worn by many of our Nation's police officers in their dangerous work by detering the availability and use of ammunition designed to penetrate armor. At the same time, the bill does not unreasonably impact on the legitimate interests of America's sporting and hunting community.

This legislation would regulate the manufacture and importation of ammunition which is designed as armor piercing. It amends title 18 of the United States Code to prohibit the manufacture and importation of armor-piercing ammunition except for law enforcement, military, or export purposes. The manufacture or importation for these permissible uses would be regulated through the licensing and the provisions of the Gun Control Act of 1968.

In addition, a mandatory 5-year minimum prison sentence for the possession or use of armor-piercing ammunition during the commission of a violent felony is added to ensure stiff punishment for the criminal who resorts to its use.

This legislation, which reflects the results of many months of hard work by the various affected parties, is the best means for responsibly controlling armor-piercing ammunition and providing protection to our police officers.●

FEDERAL POLYGRAPH LIMITATION AND ANTI-CENSORSHIP ACT OF 1985

(Mr. BROOKS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD and to include extraneous matter.)

● Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing the Federal Polygraph Limitation and Anti-Censorship Act of 1985. This bill is essentially the same as legislation I proposed during the last session of Congress. That bill was extensively reviewed by several committees of the House during the last Congress, but was not addressed by the full House in the press of business at the close of the last session.

I expect that many of my colleagues are familiar with the bill and its history. The circumstances that gave rise to this legislation and the events of the last Congress are critical, though, to a complete understanding of the need for and purposes of this legislation. At the risk of being unduly repetitious, I think it is important, therefore, to lay out that background with some detail.

This bill is based upon the findings and recommendations of the Government Operations Committee, which reviewed the censorship and polygraph initiatives of the Reagan administration in October 1983.

Specifically, the committee recommended against the implementation of the prepublication censorship and polygraph provisions of Presidential National Security Decision Directive 84. These provisions would have mandated the signing of life long prepublication censorship contracts by over 100,000 Government employees and the coerced use of polygraph exams for all employees in the course of leak investigations. The committee also recommended against the implementation of broader, but parallel, polygraph policies which would have expanded the coerced use of polygraph tests to preemployment screening, preaccess interviews, and random security checking.

In a bipartisan report, the Government Operations Committee concluded that the prepublication censorship contracts would entail unwarranted prior restraints in violation of the first amendment. This program, as with any Government censorship of speech, has a tremendous potential for political abuse. Such a system has many harmful consequences, even when implemented and carried out with the most noble of intentions. Quite simply, this censorship system directly undermines a pillar of America's political system—the freedom from prior governmental restraint in matters of political discourse. My bill would prohibit this censorship policy.

The Government Operations Committee also concluded that there is no scientifically acceptable evidence to support the polygraph policies proposed and good reason to believe they will result in high error rates causing harm to many innocent people, our Government, and national security. For its review, the Government Operations Committee requested the Congress' Office of Technology Assessment to study the available scientific literature on polygraph testing and advise the Congress on its validity. The OTA concluded that there was no scientifically acceptable evidence to support the use of widespread polygraph screening as proposed.

In the context of narrow specific-incident investigations—generally criminal—the OTA found conflicting scientific conclusions on polygraph validity. In 28 studies presenting "acceptable scientific criteria," correct guilty detections were found to be as low as 35 percent and correct innocent detections as low as 12.5 percent. A coin toss could be more accurate.

Further, OTA found that in any context—narrow criminal investigations or widespread screening—coercing persons to take a polygraph test would likely decrease any validity the test may have. Because there is no physiological response unique to lying, the polygraph cannot distinguish between people who are lying and those who are merely afraid or nervous. Coercing employees to submit to polygraph tests increases the likelihood of inaccurate conclusions.

OTA also indicated that there are serious questions regarding the polygraph test's susceptibility to countermeasures. As a result, use of the polygraph may create a false sense of security and weaken our national defense. Moles are often good liars.

This legislation would prohibit the screening use of polygraph testing and would place tight controls on its use in specific incident investigations, one of which is that the test be truly voluntary.

Last February, as the previous bill was proceeding to markup, the White House announced that it was suspending, temporarily, the polygraph and censorship portions of NSDD 84. As it turns out, however, this suspension has had little effect on the actual implementation of these administration initiatives. The GAO, in a new investigation requested by myself and Chairman FORD of the Post Office and Civil Committee, has concluded that right now all the major agencies, including DOD, State, Agriculture, Commerce, Justice, Energy, Treasury, and Transportation are requiring certain employees to sign lifelong prepublication review contracts.

These contracts are virtually identical to those which had been suspended by the President. At the DOD, alone, GAO, in June of 1984, found that since 1981, over 156,000 employees have already signed these lifelong censorship contracts.

The GAO report demonstrates that the President's suspension of the polygraph provision of NSDD 84 has not affected the administration's plans for screening with polygraphs either. Currently, the Department of Defense intends to institute a coerced polygraph screening program which will cover over 100,000 Department employees. The Department of Defense intends to hire 50 new polygraph operators to enable it to conduct 10,000 new screening exams annually. Other agencies are also following suit. For instance, the Justice Department intends to widen its polygraph screening program, and the Federal Emergency management Agency has drawn up a polygraph screening program to be implemented for the first time at that agency.

It is incumbent, therefore, that this legislation be expeditiously considered and passed by the Congress to undo, and prevent further reincarnations of, these dangerous censorship and polygraph policies.●

CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT FOR A SIX-YEAR TERM FOR THE PRESIDENT

(Mr. BROOKS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD and to include extraneous matter.)

● Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing a joint resolution proposing a constitutional amendment which would provide single 6-year terms for the President and Vice President. This is a proposal which I have offered for the past several Congresses, but its origins go back nearly 200 years to the Constitutional Convention. While the Founding Fathers decided to provide for 4-year Presidential terms, the concept for a single 6-year term of office for our Chief Executive is one which merits further consideration at this time.

The pressures of modern political circumstances have turned a President's first 4 years into a virtual continuous reelection campaign. No sooner is the President elected, than he must focus on his next election. While the current Chief Executive had a relatively easy time in securing renomination and reelection, his experience has been the exception rather than the rule. Indeed, both of his predecessors faced grueling and time-consuming contests for their party's nomination, as well as intense and ultimately losing battles for reelection.

Nobody can calculate the price that the country has paid for the distraction that renomination and reelection imposes on a President. Given the stresses and complexities of the office of President, it is vital that we make this office as effective as possible and remove those forces that work against effective Presidential operation. We will all benefit if the occupant of the Oval Office is free to concentrate on the job we elected him to do—running the country—instead of running for a second 4-year term.

Mr. Speaker, a single 6-year term will give our Presidents the time they need to carry out their programs. Limiting them to a single 6-year term will allow them to focus on the job of President instead of the role of candidate.

I hope that the 99th Congress will give serious attention to this proposal.●

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

WEISS REINTRODUCES BILLS TO RESTORE SOCIAL SECURITY BENEFITS

HON. TED WEISS
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 3, 1985

● Mr. WEISS. Mr. Speaker, there is no government program in American history that has meant so much to so many people as Social Security. This program has kept millions out of the clutches of poverty. It currently serves 36 million Americans, including the elderly, the disabled and their families, and the widowed and orphaned. It is rightly treasured by those who have come to rely on it for their very survival.

The Social Security benefits that protect our Nation's elderly and disabled are the result of a contract that has been paid for by American workers and honored by the Government for half a century. However, in 1981, the President and the Congress broke this longstanding contract with the American people. Ignoring the pleas of millions of current and future beneficiaries, the administration steamrolled massive cuts in Social Security through the Congress. In order to finance a tax bonanza for the wealthy and an unprecedented, destabilizing military buildup, Social Security benefits were reduced, and in many cases, eliminated.

In 1983, Congress agreed to a package of Social Security changes meant to ensure the solvency of the system well into next century. While many provisions of this agreement were commendable, the agreement once again called upon our Nation's elderly and disabled citizens to make further sacrifices in support of the Reagan administration's misguided budget policies. Moreover, the 1983 Social Security changes failed to address many of the most unconscionable inequities that had been forced on the American people 2 years earlier.

It is never too late to do what is fair. Today, I am reintroducing legislation to restore three of the most important benefits that were cut in 1981. Specifically, these bills would restore student benefits, the lump-sum death benefit for all beneficiaries, and the mother's and father's benefit for those caring for children under age 18.

In past years, the Social Security student benefit compensated dependent children attending college or vocational school for loss of income due to the death, retirement, or disability of their parents. It helped equalize educational opportunities for those students who could not rely on their parents for support during those critical few years. Workers who earned this insurance recognized and appreciated its value in safeguarding the educational and employment future of their children.

Prior to the enacted cuts, approximately 800,000 student beneficiaries received an average of $3,000 per year in benefits. These benefits have been progressively diminished as a result of the 1981 cuts, and they are scheduled to be eliminated entirely in April 1985. Reductions in this program have already inflicted tremendous hardships on hundreds of thousands of students, who are least able to overcome them.

The facts speak for themselves. Prior to the enacted cuts, 80 percent of student beneficiaries were eligible because one or both of their parents was deceased or disabled. In 1977, 70 percent of the recipients of this program came from families whose income was less than $5,000. Moreover, program recipients were likely to be minorities, come from blue-collar backgrounds, and work part time or summers while attending school. There can be no doubt that this benefit cut seriously imperils the opportunity that these children will have to better themselves by furthering their education.

The President claimed that these students would be adequately compensated for this loss of income security by other student aid programs. However, the administration conventiently failed to explain that other student assistance programs also suffered tremendous cuts in recent years and are targeted for further cuts in the coming years. The hard truth is that other programs cannot substitute for the critically depleted resources that result from this unfair cut. For the sake of these children, our greatest hope for the future, I urge that Congress take prompt action on this bill to restore the Social Security student benefit.

The second bill I am reintroducing would restore the lump-sum death benefit in all cases. In 1981, this $255 benefit was restricted to death cases where there is a surviving spouse or dependent child. In other words, this benefit is no longer payable to other family members, such as a sister, aunt, grandparent, or independent child, who assume responsibility for burial expenses. Estimates made at the time of enactment of this cut suggest that as many as 2.6 million people have already been denied benefits as a result of this change during the last 3 years.

The lump-sum death benefit has been a small, but integral, part of the Social Security program since its inception in 1935. It helps ease the burden of the high costs of funerals, and it contributes to the peace of mind of older Americans who view this sum as critical to financing a dignified burial. And sadly, for many workers, the death benefit is the only return paid on their lifetime contribution to the Social Security system. This cut was a shameful way to penalize workers and their families, and full funding for the lump-sum death benefit should be promptly restored.

The final bill that I am reintroducing would restore benefits paid either to a mother or father caring for an entitled child up to age 18. The 1981 amendment cut back this benefit so as to apply only through the child's 16th birthday.

This cut is but another example of the unjustified whittling away of Social Security's protection for families of disabled, retired, or deceased workers raising dependent children. Most children, age 16 to 18, are completing their high school education and depend on their parents to support them. According to advance estimates by the Social Security Administration, over 200,000 parents caring for youth in this age group have already lost this critical assistance. Once again, I call on my colleagues to support my effort to reinstate this benefit.

Across the country, older Americans, workers, and their families have expressed outrage that the Congress and the President have repeatedly ignored the Social Security compact and deprived thousands of families of the benefits they have earned. Poll after poll indicates that the American people are close to unanimity in their belief that Social Security benefits must be protected at all costs.

The Social Security system does not survive on the tax receipts of American workers alone. It also relies on the continuing support and confidence of those workers and their families. By drastically cutting benefits against the public will, the administration and its supporters have taken a major risk. Their actions jeopardize public trust not only in the Social Security system, but in the Government as a whole. In this way, they have endangered the future of Social Security and the future of all the progressive achievements of the Government that protect the welfare of American citizens.

Just as regrettably, these actions gamble with the hopes and aspirations of millions of Americans. It is essential for the sake of these people and for the sake of the Social Security system as a whole that we reverse these callous changes.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to join with me to right the wrongs of the Reagan administration and to restore these Social Security benefits to the people who earned them and who are entitled to them.
